THE FAT LADY'S STILL SINGING...

Opera Boston's Innovation Gala, held at the State Room, was proof positive that Boston has a spot on the world's opera map.

Among the giants of the musical world on-hand: iconoclastic director Peter Sellars, down-to-earth diva Dawn Upshaw, überbrilliant composer Osvaldo Golijov, broadcasting behemoth Ron della Chiesa, world-famous Tchaikovsky interpreter Michael Lewin and his banking babe, Dora, Cerise Lim Jacobs (who's writing the libretto for an opera), design guru Burt Sun, fashionista Alfred Fiandaca, Celebrity Series head honcha Marti Jones, board chair Winnie Gray, the evening's incomparable honoree, Joanne Walton Dickinson, and one martini-swilling socialite who said, without a trace of irony, "I made a pact with God that I wouldn't drink wine for a year... but that doesn't rule out vodka."

However, the evening's funniest comment came from the man who was talking about a female friend and said, "It's interesting to know somebody for longer than she admits to being alive."

FACELIFTS R US...

The chance to spend a night in jail with the mayor sounds too good to be true, so when the Bostonian Society hosted its History Award Gala at the new Liberty Hotel (formerly the Charles Street Jail), the big shots showed up in droves.

Among them: the hotel's owner, Dick Friedman, with the shockingly gorgeous Nancy, best-selling author Nathaniel Philbrick, megaphilanthropist Linda Cabot Black, the delightful Anita Lincoln, developer Tony Pangaro and TV personality Emily Rooney, to name a few.

Although the mayor left to catch the game at Fenway immediately after receiving his award, the first lady stayed for the duration, and everyone was held spellbound by Philbrick's speech.

However, the most interesting comment came from the man who mumbled, "Historic preservation? Some of these women have done a wonderful job... although I do think their plastic surgeons deserve some of the credit."

BLOWING OFF STEAM...

The sushi bar and auction items like South African safari more than made up the fog-obscured views from the Sta Room during the fundraiser hosted Hedge Funds Care to benefit child abu prevention and treatment services like Pa ents Helping Parents and the Childre Trust Fund.

On hand for the festivities were cocha Charlie Whitlock and Jeff Crispe movers and shakers Lindsi Shine, Cour ney Wilkinson and Connie DeBoeve the delectable Sandie Driscoll, and—add a bit of celebrity sizzle—New Engla Patriot Ben Watson and his smokingly h wife, Kirsten.

Between fantastic food and a raf where guests had a better than 1-in-1 chance of winning a diamond necklace not to mention a live auction conduct by Christie's hotshots Tash Perrin a Josh Brinckerhoff (who flew in from N York for the occasion)—the event wa smashing success.

As one guest put it, "This certain beats the hell out of staying at work un 10 pm."

SHOULDA BROUGHT EARPLUGS...

The South End's Cyclorama was tran formed into a Norman Rockwell–sty dining room (with video projections o living room and a kitchen in the b areas) for A Family Gathering, the 20t anniversary celebration of the Family-t Family Project, which battles fam homelessness.

There to honor founders Paul and Kat Buttenweiser were such megabenefact as Steve and Jill Karp, Steve and Ba bara Grossman, nonprofit Adonis Jon than Scott, art supplies mogul Lior Spiro with his vivacious blonde wife, V vian, and daughter, Laura, Pingree Scho bigwig Steve Filosa, ubiquitous party p Pamela and John Humphrey, ridic lously cute couple Ricardo Rodrigu and Michael Kelley, developer Ed Lin with the ever-stylish Joyce, do-good Cokie and Lee Perry and Hod and Ca sandra Irvine, hair deity Mario Rus and his other half, Frank Gilligan, the lightful Susan Kaplan and one guest w described another by saying, "When the a pause in the conversation, you can h her climbing."

However, the funniest remark ca from a major donor who noted that good deed goes unpunished as she took l seat, with the Berklee College of Mu Gospel Choir blaring through speak right next to her ear.

"They're wonderful," she said, "I truthfully, I'd thank sweet Jesus if the just shut up." iB

KELLY
AUTOMOTIVE GROUP

The Kelly Automotive Group Offers Answers to the Frequently Pondered Questions of Car Buyers.

In a world when the internet offers an array of endless automotive data, there are still fundamental questions consumers struggle with every day. So, Brian Kelly, President of the Kelly Automotive Group has produced a series of videos that answer some of these questions, in a detailed, yet easy to understand manner, without a business agenda.

There are four such videos...

- Lease Or Buy
- Best Way To Finance
- How To Read A Car Ad
- How To Choose A Dealer

"I am asked these questions everywhere I go," Brian Kelly explains. "It's time the public has a professional and inside explanation. At first glance, it would be logical to assume these videos are elongated Kelly commercials, but refreshingly they are not."

All four videos are there for your immediate viewing, right now, at kellyauto.com

Major Makeover

Earlier this year, the Improper Bostonian decided to go under the knife. The magazine's last redesign took place a decade ago. With half a million readers checking us out each issue, we wanted to up the ante.

Like a celebutante, we put our face in the hands of an expert. Enter Joe Heroun, our own Rachel Zoe. Heroun and the Improper go way back to our tabloid days. He brings loads of local and national experience to the current job, including serving as a creative consultant to Men's Health and design director for the The New Republic.

The results show a cleaner, hipper Improper. You'll notice an expanded front-of-the-book section, with more coverage of lifestyle topics like cocktails and clothing. We've also moved stuff around to make information on, say, food and wine easier to find. Of course, we'd be nothing without our columnists—Soroff, Ezra, Spooner and the rest remain on board.

It seems appropriate that our new look coincides with our holiday shopping issue, because what we got was a serious makeover. We can't wait to hear what you think.

Patriot-ism

RAH TEAM

It's hard work embodying glamour. "We're not just pretty girls who stand in the field in skimpy outfits," says Quinn Kingston, 23, a line captain with the New England Patriots cheerleaders, arguably the NFL's hottest squad this stellar season. "There's snow, rain and mud. And you wear three-inch heels."

As well as mastering choreography so dizzying it'd give George Balanchine a nosebleed, Patriots cheerleaders travel the world bolstering morale on U.S. military bases. (Kingston has been to Afghanistan; her photomates head abroad next month.)

But nothing compares to Foxborough. "Other teams have loyal fans," says Kingston. "But New England fans are insane." ANDREW RIMAS

SPOON ME Dip into Chez Henri's butternut bisque.

Good Eats

Butternut Born Again

Squash soup—most often of the silky butternut variety—headlines starter courses around town come November, though few showcase a non-Yankee spin so markedly as Paul O'Connell's recent concoction at his Latin-flaired Cambridge bistro. A welcome departure from the tried-and-true (read: overplayed) maple creams, cinnamon-sugar croutons and caramelized apples, this spoon-coating blue delicata bisque further reinvents itself with the warmth of West Indian–inspired allspice, inky teardrops of tonka bean crème fraîche and the subtle yet unmistakable burn of curry powder. ELIZABETH BOMZE

Not since Vivienne Westwood met the Sex Pistols have leather jackets been this hot. Animal hide has recently graced the bods of Angelina Jolie, Jessica Alba and Keira Knightley. While those three turn to A-list label Mike & Chris, known for its creativity and buttery-soft leather, more affordable options are available and just as satisfying. Of course, it takes a certain style to stand out from the herd. The black capelet with buckled sleeves and buttons caught our eye. AMANDA KNORR

BROKEN COVER

AFTER A FUN NIGHT of partying and a kiss or two from a cute boy I just met, I ended the evening and asked if he wanted to borrow an umbrella.

It was late and raining outside and I wanted to be considerate. The next morning I walked down my street only to notice a destroyed version of my umbrella on the sidewalk. Normally I wouldn't pick up wreckage from the street but this called for an investigation. I tried to determine its size and scoured the sidewalk for a fragment of the wooden handle—it was unmistakably mine. Stranger still, the gentleman e-mailed the next day thanking me for the umbrella... yet I'm left wondering what exactly happened to cause its fateful end?

Anonymous

To the rich jerk:

I WORK IN A VERY STRESSFUL environment—a million things to do a day, not to mention it's understaffed, and everyone feels underappreciated and overworked. But rich, lazy people like you somehow got it in their heads that just because they have a lot of money, they can treat people like we should be thankful that they speak to us directly, instead of having their secretaries do it. I can't stand your demanding tone and your laziness to do even the simplest things yourselves. Stop sending me a laundry list of things to do. Oh, and by the way, can I have it done in 15 minutes before you leave to go skiing this weekend? It can't be done!

Disgruntled employee

To the creepy guy at work:

EVERY AFTERNOON you're waiting for me in the mailroom. Sometimes you manage to talk about how great you are at your job and how in your next job you'll make tons of money. Usually you stand there awkwardly as I do my stuff and then walk down with me back to my office, which is totally unnecessary and painfully awkward. It's very obvious that you'd like to say something, but instead you just sort of stare and ask me what I'm doing this weekend four or five times. You're barking up the wrong tree, buddy.

Not interested

To the male species:

I DON'T KNOW WHY you think that you can treat females the way you do. No, it's not OK that you don't call when you say you will. No, it's not OK that you'd rather go and get drunk with your friends than see your girlfriend. No, it's not OK that you can flatly break up with someone on the phone, after two years of being together. I don't know what it is about having a Y-chromosome that's made you so emotionally bankrupt and handicapped, but IT'S NOT OK. Oh, and don't pay for us because you think you have to do it. Pay for us because you want to.

Hummina Hummina

Showcasing the Rabbit on HBO's Sex and the City certainly got women everywhere buzzing, er, talking about the popular vibrator. But the little pink bunny is old news; luckily Too Timid, an upscale sex shop that opened on Newbury Street in August, carries the latest in faux phalluses. The Pearl Panther ($46.95) came shortly after the Rabbit's release, but the hummingbird-shaped Elite 7x ($89.95) rules this animal kingdom, guaranteeing the ultimate orgasm with its seven levels of pleasure and waterproof exterior. All in time for Sex and the City: The Movie. Too Timid, 297 Newbury St., Boston (617-431-5080).

Turkey Toast

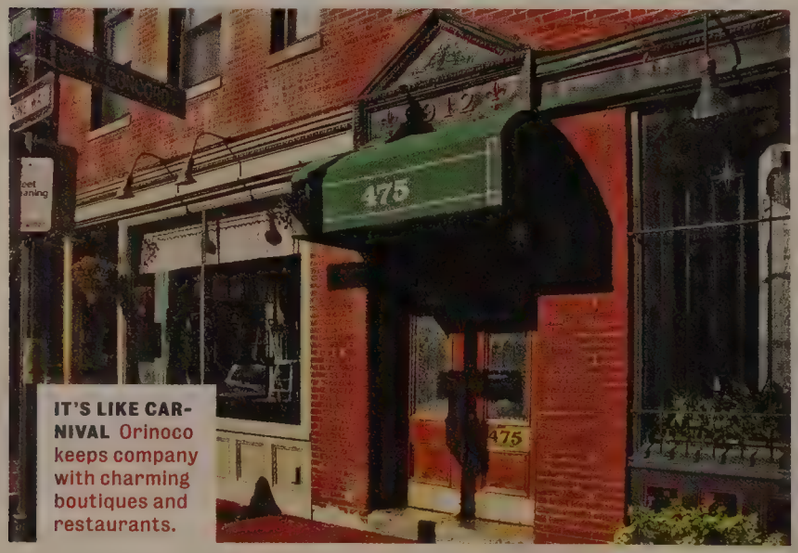
Comfort food doesn't have to mean boring wine. Better to drink something bold with your bird, or hybrid/combination, or completely fake fowl, as the case may be. Rather than put your taste buds on hold for the holidays, try serving something stylish and attention-grabbing. Your guests will give thanks.

TURKEY
St. Francis "Wild Oak" Old Vine Zinfandel, Sonoma, 2004 ($30). What's more red-blooded American rugged than zinfandel? This spicy number, from Sonoma's long-time zin specialist, has got the goods to stand up to any traditional gobbler. It's all about style (intense, purple, ripe) and quality (pure dark fruit, lingering finish). Maybe not the biggest but, pound for pound, it's definitely one of the best.

DUCK
Pegasus Bay Pinot Noir, Waipara Valley, New Zealand, 2004 ($42). If you've gone to the trouble of cooking duck, go all the way and pour something delicious to match it. Pure velvet in texture with earthy, mushroomy notes, hints of dried herb and mineral, and ripe black cherry–like fruit, this wine is a supple, beautifully balanced stunner.

ROAST CHICKEN
Domaine les Pallieres, Gigondas, Rhone Valley, 2004 ($30). Made by esteemed Châteauneuf-du-Pape producer Vieux Telegraphe, this grenache-based blend will warm up your palate with its concentrated juicy black fruit and peppery flavor accents. Incredibly lush and mellow, but with a strong presence of the earth (what the French call "terroir"), this is a real mouthful.

TURDUCKEN
Tua Rita, Perlato del Bosco, IGT Tuscany, Italy, 2005 ($45). We'll close out the meat with one of those wow-wow-wow wines. As in: What's that? It's an amazing sangiovese/cabernet marriage with a floral fragrance, soft chocolate and cherry-like flavors, and layered smoky-spice lusciousness. A conversation-stopper from one of Italy's true genius winemakers, Stefano Chioccioli.



TOFURKEY
Villa Giada "Suri" Barbera d'Asti, Piedmont, 2005 ($14). Since tofurkey is a conversation piece, you need a wine with talking points. The organic grapes used in this single-vineyard, unoaked, brightly flavored red are a start, while bracingly tart, pure cherry-like fruit, minimal tannins and savory but mellow spice finish should keep everyone commenting.

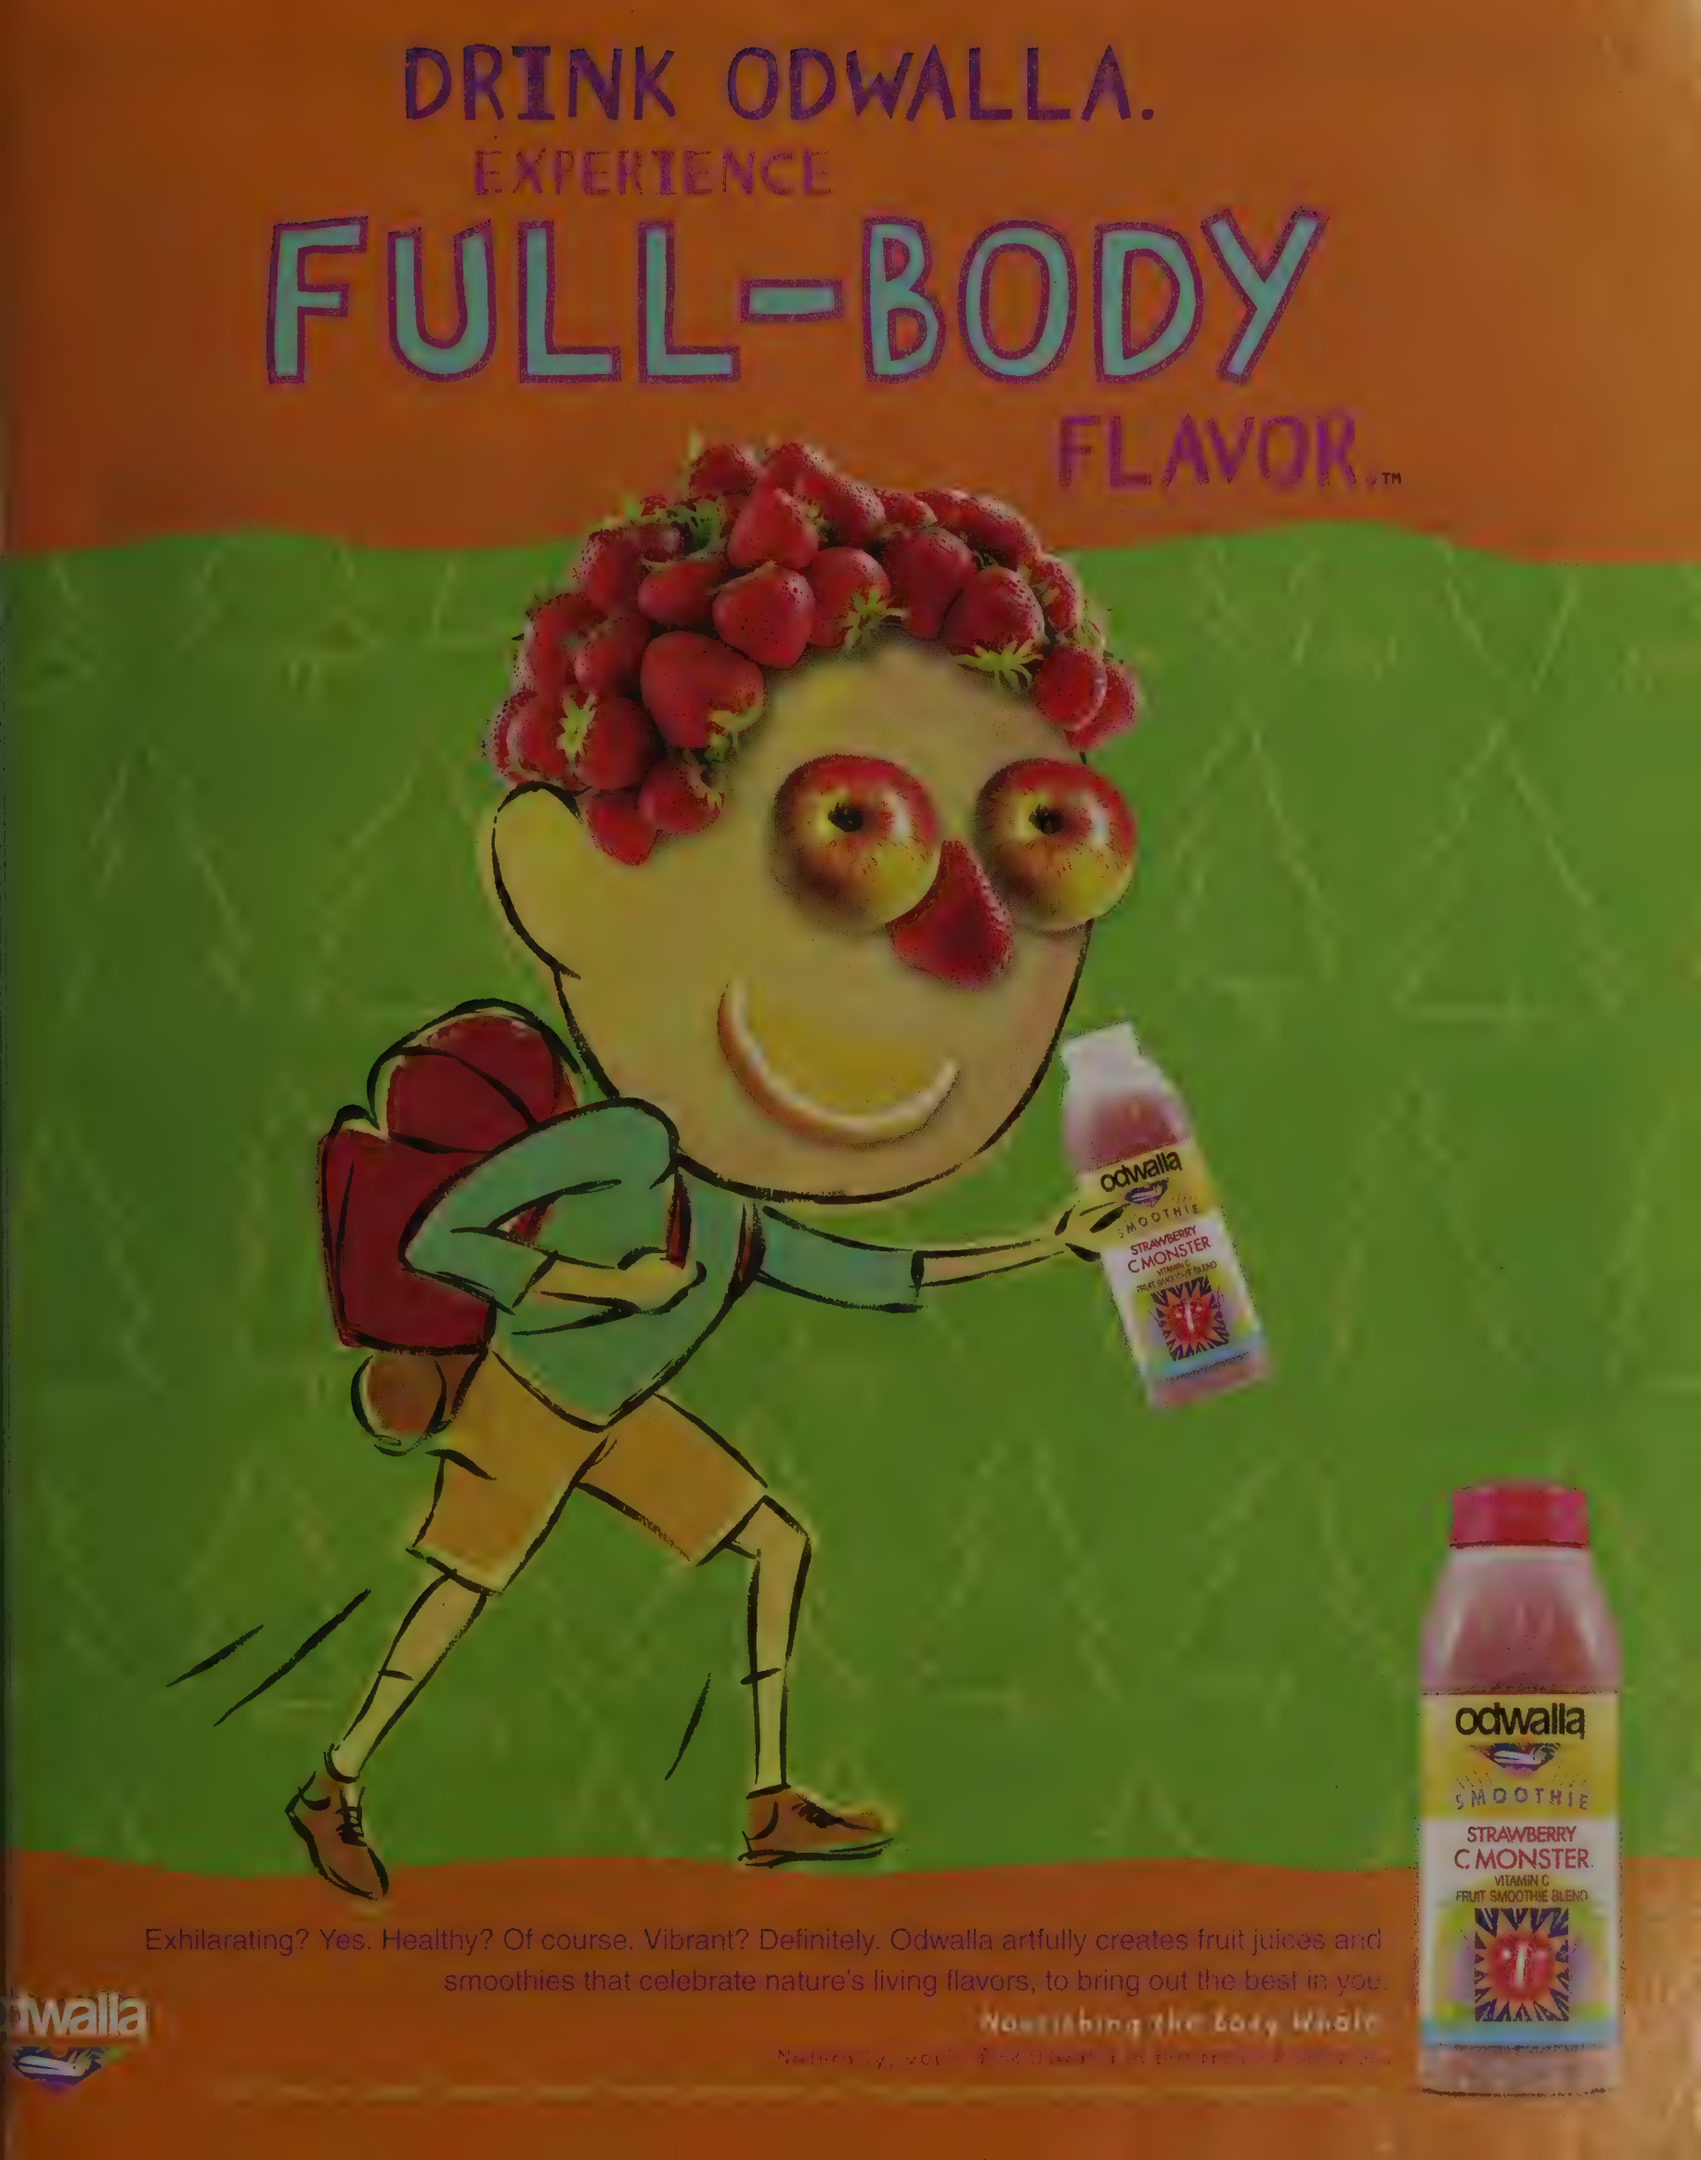
Know Your Squares

Pretty in Red Brick



Deep in the real estate Candyland called the South End, there's a nest of brownstones that leans against the grassy tombs of the South Burying Ground and the rambling tomato plants of the Rutland Community Gardens. While most of the neighborhood is charming, the rectangle bordered by Shawmut, West Concord, Washington and Rutland is twee enough to house the collected characters of Beatrix Potter, with the Sugar Plum Fairy as den mother. Facing the gardens is Flour Bakery + Café (1595 Washington St.), home to Boston's most delightful cinnamon-cream brioche, while sweetness of another sort is embodied in Kiwi Baby (1636 Washington St.), purveyor of bright clothing and accessories in rugrat sizes. Back towards Cumston Street, past a bouquet of real estate signs and pedigree terriers, lie Wül (89 West Concord St.), a "natural" bedding store, and London Lace (470 Shawmut St.), where the windows are draped like virgin brides. Across the way, Siraj Fusion Café (472 Shawmut St.) wafts spice, while on the far corner stands the trendy Venezuelan bistro Orinoco (477 Shawmut St.)—a dollop of ocean-blue paint and Latin cool among the toasty red brick and wrought iron. ANDREW RIMAS

Drink of the Moment

Beyond Bars

Break out of your drinking routine with this jammy cocktail.

No doubt the creator of pruno—an alcoholic beverage made from mess-hall ingredients—was the toast of the cellblock after pulling the first fetid vintage out from behind his radiator. At jail-themed Alibi, general manager Dimitra Tsourianis refines the prison cocktail with her Doing Thyme, which injects the genre with both class and top-shelf gin. It's purple, fruity and effervescent, but with a sharp bite that chases away any girly accusations. And the cozy smell of thyme shrouds thoughts of pretentiousness. "It smells foresty almost," Tsourianis says. "When I smell it, I think of the holidays." Whip up a batch for your next party and garnish with that prison-cocktail pièce de résistance—a whiff of freedom.

NICK ALTSCHULLER

Doing Thyme

"I have the marmalade because I was looking for something sweet for balance. I used to walk through Super 88 and look for ideas, because you don't want to just open up a cocktail book."

HOLIDAY CHEER

Joie de Julia

FROM HER GAWKY days as a six-foot-two-inch, 36-year-old, rather loud and unserious Californian, Julia Child scaled the heights of serious French cooking. Like a detailed recipe, it's all recorded in My Life in France, now out in paperback. The marvel is how much salty, exuberant energy she brought to it, dropping chickens on the floor during her TV show even as she taught complex skills to cake-mix America. And the evolution of her famous cookbook, written with the sometimes-imperious and dogmatic Frenchwoman Simca, took years and years, very nearly crashing before publication. But moving about Europe with her loving, cosmopolitan husband, Paul, a diplomat, she demonstrates her entrancing taste for the flavors of life itself, not to mention garlic. Even with her dogged determination, endlessly experimenting to perfect a given dish (merry descriptions appear throughout), she's no gastronomic prima donna. Rather Child's that human, informal, appreciative tall girl, with the virtues of playfulness following her into history. Her characters are colorful, and Falstaff would burst eating the giant meals they all consume. My Life in France by Julia Child with Alex Prud'Homme.

FINGER LICKIN' Mastering the art of tasting

Vinegar: Almost a Drink

YES, AT EDIBLES BY EVERS in Charlestown, a lusciously green-painted shop, you'll actually taste-sip teeny teaspoons of rich, rich olive oils and aged vinegars. The 40-year-aged, barrel-nurtured sherry vinegar and the O and Co. Balsamic Raspberry variety taste like heart-warming aperitifs—wild and sweet. They're waiting to lend their glow to pork and other lucky meats. A wall full of oils, ditto, reveal breadth of flavor and pepperiness, begging to get slurped up into a generous swath of bread or to enhance fish or seafood. There's truffle oil for risotto, steak or mushrooms plus lemon oil and pumpkin seed oil; in the raw they taste distinctively different. So refined, they even resemble the amazingly languid honeys, which contain chestnut, lavender and rosemary. Very fancy simmering sauces come from the vegetable aristocracy: chestnuts, shallots, sun-dried tomatoes, salted capers—and that rarified queen of spices, pretty red saffron—will lend their tinge and taste to whatever they marinate. Furthermore, they all make substantial and beautiful holiday gifts. Figgy treats and black-olive dips also invite the charming containers and skinny serving dishes Evers sells. Edibles by Evers, 211 Main St., Charlestown (617-830-1322).*

Beet It You'd never guess from their matte, rough-hewn exterior that Chioggia beets bring more glamour to the plate than other knobby, humble root vegetables. That is, until you slice one open. Unlike their siblings colored in saffron and bold, staining crimson, these Italian heirloom bulbs generally mature to a slightly smaller stature and possess stunning magenta-and-white candy-striped flesh. To best preserve their color rings—they'll often blush a rosy pink color during cooking—boil, steam or roast them skin-on before slicing, dicing or drizzling with extra-virgin olive oil.

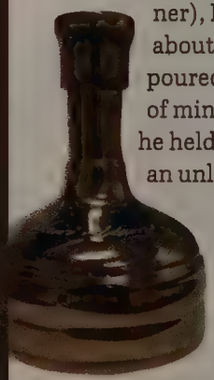
HIP HOPS



Getting sauced with Sam

'BEER IS THE NEW WINE," declares Jim Koch. Part lively raconteur, part mad scientist, and a fervent proponent of beer's natural goodness ("it's a whole-grain beverage!"), the founder and president of The Boston Beer Company is celebrating the imminent release of Sam Adams Utopias, a brew with a flavor profile that sets it alongside cognac and port—and an alcohol content that's a full 25 percent.

Twenty-five percent? "We've been breeding alcohol-tolerant yeast—ninja yeast—for 14 years, hundreds of generations," says Koch. At over 50 proof, the uncarbonated Utopias can't be legally sold in 14 states, but given extraordinarily limited production—just 12,000 bottles this year—they're specialty items whose cult status results in cameo appearances on eBay for double or triple the suggested retail price of $130.

Despite achieving new heights of sophistication and elegance (Utopias 2007 outranked cognac and port in a blind test conducted by Anthony Dias Blue at a special KO Prime dinner), Koch remains game to try just about anything in his beer. As a waiter poured chocolate sauce over a dessert of mint mousse, Koch's eyes lit up and he held up his glass of cream stout for an unlikely addition. Was it good?

Koch stirred, sipped and smiled. Wally Brine, of Loren and Wally fame, tried it, exclaimed, "I can't BELIEVE how much I like it!" and drained his glass.

PICKY, PICKY Jim Koch takes a personal hand in selecting the ingredients for Sam Adams beer.

NICE PAIR

The margaritas and maki at Sushi Teq go hand in hand.

WHEN THE Improper asked me to try Sushi Teq and report back, I figured, Why not? I know it's a cool place with great food and drinks, and I had a hankering for some maki rolls. Here's the thing, though: I'm a chef, not a critic, and I don't feel the need to preach about the positives or negatives of a colleague's restaurant. When I go out to eat, I'm there to have a good time, learn cool new tricks or what not to do in my own place, and thus I keep my opinions to myself.

But good news I can share. So here are reasons why you should check out Sushi Teq. Like a real reviewer, I brought along some friends: Tony Susi, the chef and owner of Sage, and Will Foden, my executive sous chef at Dante. All in all, a tequila- and sushi-loving crew with open minds and adventurous palates.

It felt like a Technicolor transition from the InterContinental's lobby into the Sushi Teq space, as we walked into the restaurant and immediately noticed the illuminated walls. The high-top tables and casual seating complemented the chic decor, allowing for intimate conversation areas and an ideal balance of comfort and energy. We agreed that the salsa music pumping through speakers just made sense. If tequila and sushi were personified, they'd hang out at a spot like Sushi Teq.

We started with drinks and ordered a round of Milagro Silver shots to get us off on the right foot, quickly followed by Mojaritas ($12) for the table. These aren't your typical tequila drinks, kids; people tend to associate tequila with bad, drunken college experiences, but when done right, it's the complete opposite. The servers were clearly well-versed and trained on the cocktail and dinner menu, and you could tell that they were excited to be there.

The combination of tequila with sushi definitely worked. I loved how the thinly sliced jalapeno peeked through a veil of fluke in the 510 signature roll ($14). The mixologist paired that with the blackberry-mango margarita ($12), the perfect tropical accompaniment. The margarita features a psychedelic flower of blackberry and mango puree, and as you drink it, the puree morphs into three different flowers. It reminded me of a smoothie and made me feel like I was doing something good for my body. Why work out when you can eat and drink like this? At least that's what I told myself.

As we always do, we ordered almost everything off the menu. There were a few favorites, including the Sushi Teq maki roll ($12), the Madai (Japanese red snapper; $8) and the Aburi-toro (torched tuna; $17). Typically in Italian cooking, mixing fish and cheese is a no-no, so I was curious to try the tuna mozzarella ($16), and it turned out to be a nice combination of flavors. I was also impressed by the presentation of the Big Dig roll, which defied gravity as it formed an arch over the plate.

We finished the same way we started, with a taste of El Diamante del Cielo Reposado: a smoky, oak-laced tequila with the smoothness of cognac and the bite of bourbon. (I'll definitely be back for this one.) Overall, Sushi Teq is a great spot to learn about tequila, experience delicious and artful sushi, and take in the scene. See you there. ✖✖✖

Going Out

ARMANI EXCHANGE

When the Armani Café closed, the city's young mods were left without their choice locale, and the venue's staff were left at a crossroads. Some went to Gaslight, the traditional Parisian brasserie in the South End. Others—including three managers and five servers—have come to Cafeteria, which, despite an unassuming moniker, looks like Newbury's next trendsetter.

"We wanted to make a new modern place and destination," says owner Cameron Grob. "Here's a cool place you see all the time in New York or Miami, but you never see here."

Opening at the end of the month, Cafeteria hopes to attract locals with light Italian-American fare (appetizers, $7–$13; entrees, $19–$29) from former Armani chef Larry Scotti. But Cheers this is not. With modern lounge music and specialty drinks, the venue aims to be the early-evening launching pad for late-night clubgoers.

It'll have a sophisticated vibe and a weekend feel throughout the week, says head bartender Steve Kim. With seven days of urbane entertainment, Cafeteria offers sophistication à la carte.

"Most of the bars here use fruit-flavored vodkas. We're going to try things with fresh fruits and new, unusual ingredients like port wine that you wouldn't normally find in a mixed drink." STEVE KIM, Head Bartender

CLINICAL PSYCHOLOGIST SPECIALIZING IN COUPLES AND FAMILY THERAPY IN WATERTOWN

Q: HOW CAN I SURVIVE THANKSGIVING WITH MY RELATIVES?

"There's a reason why Hollywood makes so many movies about holiday family gatherings, with eccentric relatives and unresolved family dynamics; there tends to be a bit of truth in them for many of us. If you'll be going to any potentially challenging family gatherings this holiday season, here are tips for coping:

"Before you even get there, consider the optimal length of time the gathering will remain reasonably positive and plan your exit accordingly, and if you're trying to change or improve on a family pattern or ritual, work with 'allies' in the family ahead of time so that there can be a coordinated initiative.

"In dealing with particularly difficult relatives, cultivate a co-conspirator with whom you can sneak away and marvel about what Uncle Harry said or did this year. Lastly, keep your sense of humor and do what you can to appreciate your family's quirks, as well as their more endearing qualities. Be willing to laugh at yourself, too. Is there a great comedy script in your family just waiting to be written? And who will play Aunt Ellie?"

Grooming

CUTTING EDGES

No matter how many leaps and bounds women's shaving technology takes, it always seems like men's razors exist in a futuristic wonderland of chrome and gimmicks. Case in point: Gillette and the Art of Shaving's collaboration on the Fusion Chrome Collection, which came out in October. Apparently, four stacked blades weren't cutting it, so now Gillette sports five. These super-shavers also boast a micro-textured grip, a vibrating micro-pulse and the first-ever built-in spotlight to catch hairs hiding in the shadows. The back of the razor has a Precision Trimmer Blade for sideburns, the underside of the nose and the contours of facial hair. In case of accidental activation, the razor turns off after approximately eight minutes to save its AAA batteries. So guys, dispose of the disposables and upgrade—we ladies are dying to steal it. Then again, we wouldn't be surprised if this thing has its own tracking device. AMANDA KNORR

STANDARD ISSUES

The 2008 election isn't just an excuse to rant about random stuff. OK, maybe it is.

FELLOW AMERICANS, the 2008 presidential election is right around the corner, and I, like you, am concerned about the issues. Problems like health care, social security and the war in Iraq—these are things that many, many other journalists have written about. A lot. And so I consider it my responsibility to address different, though no less important, issues that face our nation. Questions such as, "What should we name the next space shuttle?" Because "Space Shuttle" is really lame and generic. That's like building a sentient robot who becomes the Shakespeare of our time and naming it "Wicked Smart Robot."

How about something with a little pizzazz, like "StarMaster PlasmaTron Coupe de Ville"? That'd put the fear in the Ruskies.

It's important that I bring subjects like this to light, because otherwise I'd have no grounds for writing a column of random thoughts. So here are three issues that this voter cares about in 2008:

The giant horse asses sticking out the back of the trailer were a clue of equine transportation.

1. Horse Trailer Warnings

I was recently out in the western part of the state, where evidently people still ride horses. I base this assumption on the number of horse trailers I saw on the road. While I have no problem with horses specifically, I do have a problem with horse owners who feel compelled to plaster their trailers with giant signs reading, "Caution! Horses!" and so forth. First of all, horse owners, thanks for the heads-up. Without the signs, I wouldn't have been sure whether or not you had horses in there. True, the giant horse asses sticking out the back of the trailer were a clue, but certainly not a definitive indication, of equine transportation. Second, now that I know there are horses on board, I will dramatically alter my behavior. As I pass your vehicle on the highway, I will refrain from shooting a starter's pistol out the window, or from yelling "Giddyup!" Also, I'll be extra careful not to crash into your car and have all of us perish in a fiery wreck, because horses are practically an endangered species. In summary, I will support the candidate who agrees with my position that horse trailer warnings are silly.

2. Chinese Adoption

My wife and I are beginning to discuss kids. She thinks there's no point in having a biological child when there are so many kids out there to adopt, particularly in China. I think it'd be unfair not to perpetuate my DNA, because what the world needs is more of me. And if it takes nine months of nausea, mood swings and a distended abdomen capped by hours of incomprehensible pain to make that happen, then that's a price we'll have to pay.

But I recently had a discussion with a friend who swayed me in the direction of Chinese adoption. This friend is in the military, and based on what he's heard, we should all be very, very worried. China's acting like it's minding its own business, while behind the scenes it's preparing for world domination. I mean, these are people who are already planning the weather for the next Olympics.

This is why Chinese adoption should be a major issue in 2008. We need to encourage more Chinese adoption in order to forestall the takeover by the China juggernaut. By adopting a Chinese child, you're taking a player from their team and adding a player to ours. What's more, these kids are smart. One of my IMPROPER colleagues adopted a baby from China, and at age 3 she's already an accomplished pianist and freestyle snowboarder who's fluent in Latin. That's certainly more than I could expect from a biological Dyer baby. So go ahead and adopt a Chinese child—you'll probably end up with a good kid, and maybe you'll get extra food rations when our Chinese masters take over.

3. Baggage Claim Rules

I try to be polite at the baggage claim. As a strapping young buck, it's my social responsibility to assist the frail and elderly. However, there need to be rules in place, because lately things have gotten out of hand. On a recent trip, I helped a woman who was struggling with her bag, only to have her throw it back on the belt. OK, we all make mistakes. But once I helped her, she had me picking nearly every bag off the belt so she could examine it. Most of these suitcases looked nothing alike. Clearly, she had no clue what her luggage looked like, so she was determined to inspect every piece. I had to get out of there, so I pretended a random bag was mine and walked away, only to return to the opposite side of the belt. Lady, for crying out loud, tie a red ribbon to the handle. I had a similar scenario unfold with an old man. I tried to help him, but he was doing catch-and-release with every frickin' bag on the belt. Finally, he wrestled one off by himself and put it on his cart. It was my suitcase.

Fortunately, I have a solution to this chaos. The baggage belt will be divided into three zones. The first zone, closest to where the bags come out, will be the exclusive domain of the physically fit and ruthlessly decisive. If you grab the wrong bag even once, you'll be bounced to the second section of the belt, where things are still crowded, but a little more mellow. Finally, the weak and nearsighted will be consigned to the final third of the belt, where there are fewer bags and more space to pursue your blue—or is it gray?—Samsonite. You might think this is rude or discriminatory, but I say it's time we recognized the baggage claim as the savage crocodile pit of aggression that it is. It's an imperfect world, and you can be either weak or impatient, but not both. It follows, then, that the candidate whose transportation policy includes the three-zone system will get my vote. ×××

FOLLOW THE MONEY

Go green and support local merchants this shopping season.

Marcoz Antiques

I think a lot about shopping, although I do little of it myself. If you manage people's money, it helps to kick the tires of life. This means asking questions. Whenever I'm in a store of any kind, I ask salespeople, "How's business?" And I ask a few customers, "Anything really hot that you and your friends are buying?" It's the American consumer who has fueled the growth in general business in the last five years, despite Iraq, despite ever-increasing energy prices, despite the poisonous political climate.

What can you learn from asking shopping questions that can relate to your money? Virtually everyone who reads this column has a 401(k) plan, or is enrolled in TIAA-CREF, or has a Keogh or Roth IRA. Make the intuitive leap. How many of you buy a Starbucks coffee when you're shopping? Or have been impressed by Target or Urban Outfitters, or Neiman Marcus or Ralph Lauren? And drug store shopping leads to ideas as well, like Gillette, or Johnson & Johnson, drug companies or prescription mail-order services.

A friend told me a shopping story recently that illustrates several lessons. "I heard that the Sultan of Brunei went into Barneys New York and fell in love with the store. He loved it so much, he had his flunkeys gather up several hundred thousand dollars' worth of merchandise. When he went to the cash register, his chief assistant counted out the hundreds of thousands in Brunei currency.

'I'm sorry sir,' the clerk said. 'What's this? We can take dollars or a credit card.'

The Sultan, highly indignant, waved his arms, pointing repeatedly at one of his Brunei dollars, then at himself. 'It's me, it's me,' he cried, tapping the currency with his own portrait on the bills. 'It's me.'

A manager came by and, when apprised of the amount, said, in his best Bruneian accent, 'Anything is possible, your Highness.'"

Lesson in life? Follow the money. Lesson in money? I'd say take action on alternative energies and conservation, and find ways to invest in these areas. Try looking at your daily lives more creatively. It may increase your net worth.

When it comes to spending my money, I concentrate mainly on people who own small but unique businesses, or who work in stores but offer value in their own charm, expertise and service.

When it comes to spending my money, I concentrate mainly on people who own small but unique businesses, or who work in stores but offer value in their own charm, expertise and service. Relationships, and what they teach us, make our lives richer. I plan to do much of my year-end shopping with three of these special merchants.

Two of them occupy space in a South End building that throbs with creative energy. Peggy Russell will welcome you to her studio, Iro Design, on the third floor of 450 Harrison Ave. Peggy has been in the South End for 20 years, offering her lush and original creations: scarves, blouses, bags, tunics, ties in gorgeous silk fabric, every item unique and full of color.

Marc Glasberg has sold his goodies to movie stars and princes.

If you want to stand out in a crowd, check out Iro.

I'll also stop in at Bobby From Boston. Bobby Garnett, who has been in the building for many years, has taste in vintage clothing and so much more that you'd swear it was a Ralph Lauren boutique only with more imagination and prices that are cheap. If you care about quality, taste and funkiness, head to Bobby's. There are trinkets, buttons, hats, shoes, boots, suits; a candy store for quirky fashionistas.

I bought an old, perfect-condition British blazer with a sunflower patch from some obscure boarding school. I swear it would cost $1,500 in London. I paid $60. Bobby is a character as well, with an eye for stories. He works with movie and TV people and advertising producers. Impress your neighbors; show up in an outfit that may have been worn by Fred Astaire or George Hamilton.

And I'll always visit Marc Glasberg, who has owned the shop Marcoz Antiques on Newbury Street for more than 35 years. Marc accumulates antiques, handmade jewelry, decorative accessories and furniture at prices from $15 to many thousands. He has sold his goodies to movie stars and princes from Europe, and will track down stones from caves in Thailand or special room fragrances from California or bibelots you didn't even know you had to have.

RONDO, ADALIUS, WINNING STREAKS & YOUK

3 Random Storylines

1. Tamed Colts Despite the loss, the Colts proved in Week 8 that they were at least in the Patriots' league. "Were" is the key word, however. With Dwight Freeney down for the count, Marvin Harrison not far behind and home field pretty much locked up, we're ready to book our flight to Phoenix.

2. Youki-loss? Reason No. 342 to re-sign Mike Lowell: Kevin Youkilis just became the first Boston infielder in 28 years to win the Gold Glove. So if they lose Lowell and move Youk to third, they're down not one, but two Gold Glove–caliber infielders for 2008.

3. HD C's It's over. We're throwing in the towel. It doesn't matter that the equipment's available; apparently we're just not meant to watch every Celtics game in HD. So here's our compromise, Comcast: Lose the score ticker. The picture's already bad, but when that thing pops up, it scrunches up worse than Renée Zellweger's face. We'll catch the score of the 76ers/Magic game during halftime. Promise.

5 QUESTIONS WITH RAJON RONDO

IMPROPER BOSTONIAN: It's only your second year, but you're being tested every night against the likes of Gilbert Arenas and Jason Kidd. Do you use matchups like these as a measuring stick for how your game is coming along?

Rajon Rondo: You know, I never really try and think about it like that. Obviously no offense to a guy like Jason Kidd, who's a great player, but it doesn't matter who's out there. I'm just trying to be competitive.

Do you feel the pressure of having to shut down top guys defensively on a nightly basis?

I knew this was my role on the team, and personally I feel like I'm doing pretty well so far. Defense is always going to be the key for us; I'm just trying to get stops.

A lot of people knocked this team's depth coming in, but there've already been some injuries and you guys haven't skipped a beat. Were the critics just wrong?

We've always known it was going to take all 14 guys to be successful this year. One guy goes down and there's always going to be someone there to fill in. We know what kind of depth we have.

Do you ever think of this as a sort of second rookie season—after learning the ropes last year, now you're finding out what it really takes to succeed in the NBA?

I'll always feel like a rookie when I'm on the court with Paul, Kevin and Ray. They know so much and are always willing to share that knowledge. Tonight before the game Kevin and I sat down and spoke for, like, 20 minutes. And we weren't even talking about basketball; he just wanted to talk to me about life.

There must've been so much anticipation coming into the season, being part of the same starting lineup as Kevin, Ray and Paul, but could anything have prepared you for what it's really like?

I don't think so. They just make the game easier for everybody. They are so unselfish on the court, and that rubs off on the other guys on the team.

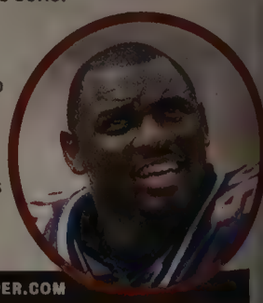
TWO POSSIBLE DESTINATIONS FOR A-ROD

1. The View One-year contract as Elisabeth Hasselbeck's fill-in? $30M. Wearing makeup everyday and having the same menstrual cycle as Joy Behar? Priceless.

2. The Yankees Yeah, he'll probably just be back in pinstripes. Considering the Steinbrenners gave Jorge Posada and his bulbous head $14M a year until 2011, they'd be crazy not to break the bank for the best player in the league. And honestly, we don't want to live in a world where A-Rod isn't on the Yankees. They go together like an overflowing bathtub and a plugged-in toaster.

STREAK FOR THE AGES...

As we write this, the Celtics, Red Sox and Patriots have won a combined 23 straight games, with the last loss coming more than a month ago against the Indians. And aside from one potentially scary game for the Celtics (Nov. 18 at Orlando), we're not so sure the streak's ending anytime soon. But here's a question: At what point does this stop being "Ha ha, I can't believe our teams never lose" and turn into "Holy shit, this is too weird. It must be Armageddon. Let's go insane and break things"?



4 DATES TO WATCH

11/23 A little history lesson in honor of Jonathan Papelbon's birthday. When all-time saves leader Trevor Hoffman turned 27, he had 25 career saves. Mariano Rivera had five career saves at that age. Paps will have 72 when he turns the big 2-7. Pretty impressive—although in fairness, we should probably mention that BK Kim had 87.

11/29 The Patriots host the Eagles Sunday night in Foxborough. The last time we saw Donovan McNabb he was vomiting all over the field like a drunken prom queen in Super Bowl XXXIX. Maybe he had the flu, or maybe he just bought a bad batch from one of Andy Reid's sons.

12/02 LeBron and the 2007 Eastern Conference champion Cavs are in town to take on KG and the 2008 Eastern Conference champs. What, too soon?

Soroff On JOEY KRAMER

Sex, drugs and rock 'n' roll: Aerosmith's drummer lives the cliché.

AEROSMITH DRUMMER Joey Kramer is serving as the honorary chair of the 2007 Boston Music Awards, which take place Dec. 1 at the Orpheum Theatre. Born and raised in the Bronx, Kramer joined his first band, the Medallions, at age 14. In 1970, he reconnected with an old friend, Steven Tyler, who had formed a band with Joe Perry and Tom Hamilton and needed a drummer. Kramer signed on and a rock phenomenon was born. Since their 1973 self-titled debut album, Aerosmith has sold more than 100 million records. In 2001, they were inducted into the Rock 'n' Roll Hall of Fame. As a solo project, Kramer recently laid down a two-disc set of more than 340 drum loops and samples, which he has made available for free to musicians, and he's also a partner in Corvette Mike New England, a specialty-car dealership in Plymouth. He and his wife, April, are active with numerous charities and live on the South Shore.

Jonathan Soroff: Should rock stars have a mandatory retirement age?
Joey Kramer: [Laughs.] Absolutely not.

Aerosmith tune you consider your personal trademark?
The one I liked the way I played on the best? There'd probably be a few: "Nobody's Fault," "The Other Side," pretty much anything off of Pump.

When was the moment in your life when you suddenly went, "Holy shit! I'm a rock star!"?
Probably the first night I got a blowjob backstage when I was, like, 21 or 22, and realized that stuff was just there for the taking, along with the cocaine that I snorted afterward.

What do you attribute Aerosmith's longevity to?
Lots of sex. The alcohol and drugs I think probably preserved or pickled us. It sounds strange, but it had something to do with the longevity of this band because it gave us a way of life. Now that we look back on it, and we're all sober, it gives me a lot of gratitude. If I didn't go through that back then, I wouldn't be where I am now, what we went through to get here, that journey. I'm grateful to be a recovering drug addict and alcoholic, because otherwise I'd just be a normal person.

If you weren't a rock star, what would you be doing?
Well, I always wanted to be an archaeologist, but my next love after music is cars. I have a car business. So I'd probably be doing one of those two things, if not both.

ILLUSTRATION BY David Cowles

"I'm grateful to be a recovering drug addict and alcoholic, because otherwise I'd just be a normal person."

Do you ever feel upstaged by Steven or Joe?
No, I don't. I am what I am, just like Popeye, and I think a big part of life is being secure with yourself, knowing yourself and having a sense of self. When you're comfortable in your own skin, and you don't want to jump out of it, you realize what's important and what's not. If I was threatened or felt upstaged by somebody else in the band, then what I'm doing is not what I should be doing. Then I should maybe be doing what they're doing. But I've always loved to play the drums. I still do. It's what keeps me going. And as far as all the other drama and situations and issues and everything else that goes along with being in a band with four other guys for 38 years, the bottom line is I get to play my drums.

Favorite band of all time if you had to pick just one?
Aw, shit. Y'know, I hate the way this is going to sound, but I love my band. But if I had to pick one in terms of listening and talent and playing in general, I'd have to say Led Zeppelin.

A band that you think is completely overrated?
Am I going to get penalized for saying it? U2. It's just my personal opinion, but I think they're way overrated. When I listen to music, I need something to hang my hat on, whether it's a lyric or something that catches me in the music, and theirs has never really done that for me. It's kind of like a drone most of the time. There's nothing that smacks me in the face and says, "Hey, listen to this!" But that's just my taste. I'm a big rhythm & blues guy.

Is there a genre of music you just don't like?
Not really. I have an appreciation for everything. I love classical music. I love Beethoven, particularly the piano concertos.

Hmm, I'd expect something with more percussion.
Well, basically what a piano is are drum rudiments applied to a keyboard, and the piano concertos are very rhythmic. I also like a lot of contemporary composers. Anything that makes you think, that stimulates your brain, even if it's very macabre.

So how's your hearing?
What? [Chuckles.] I have some high-end loss. I go in every six to eight months to have my ears checked, and they've been about the same for the last eight to 10 years. It doesn't seem to be getting any worse since I use the in-ear monitors.

First concert you ever went to?
I saw the Lovin' Spoonful down in the Village. I was probably 12 or 13. But I grew up in New York, so I went to the Fillmore all the time. I saw some of the greatest bands that ever were at the Fillmore. I saw Jefferson Airplane there, Jimi Hendrix, the Who, Procol Harum, Sly and the Family Stone. Those were the days when you didn't have to be afraid to take a joint from the person sitting next to you.

Ever made love in an elevator?
[Long pause.] Kinda. [Laughs.]

How much of a physical workout is drumming? It seems like the frontman and the drummer are the guys who sweat the most.
Again, you can ask Steven that, and he'd probably tell you he works harder, as I'd probably tell you that I do. What I do is work harder in the gym than I do on the drums so that when I get to my drums I have fun. It's not a piece of cake, and the older you get the more difficult it is. I have no choice about working out, because otherwise I simply can't do it, especially the way I play, which is very aggressive.

Last question: Can I borrow your Lamborghini?
Well, I no longer have it. I'm driving a Ferrari again.

OK, can I have the keys to your Ferrari?
Absolutely not. ✖✖✖

GIFTED TALENTED

IF YOU HAVEN'T NOTICED, BOSTON'S AWASH IN boutiques. This season we hit our old favorites, like Lekker and Good, as well as notable newbies, including Plum Produce and North River Outfitter. Some shops found new digs (Michelle Willey), while others found new names and owners (Urban Living Studio). Their offerings run the gamut: from gemstones to edibles to wearables. There's even a dash of down-home in this annual gift guide, with options for men and women at a range of prices. It's a sensorial feast fit for friends and family; all you need to do is choose who gets what.

NESN's Kathryn Tappen makes sport of shopping

Bostonians know Kathryn Tappen, 26, as NESN's weekend SportsDesk anchor. But they don't necessarily know that under the locker-room swagger of this award-winning reporter and Boston Bruins studio host beats the glamorous heart of a woman born to wear Diane von Furstenberg.

What's your idyllic shopping day?
A crisp, cool, sunny afternoon on Newbury Street, strolling up and down with a friend or two and stopping for lunch.

Where would you shop?
Queen Bee. BCBG. I love the Pottery Barn. Cole Haan for gifts for my mom and dad. I'd hit up the Niketown store for some of my athletic guy friends.

Any Boston athletes need fashion help?
I'm pretty impressed with the way guys dress around here. They have it all figured out.

What are your favorite stores?
I love BCBG because they have good colors and very unique looks. Nordstrom at the new Natick Collection is awesome! It's got so many departments.

Any shops that Boston's missing?
There's a little boutique in New York City called Pookie & Sebastian. Great accessories and great shoes! I do love shoes . . . when I find a comfortable shoe I'll wear it into the ground.

What's your one piece of essential clothing?
My winter coat and hat. Gillette Stadium is a wind tunnel, and you need a warm hat so your hair doesn't blow around everywhere.

What's your most ostentatious purchase?
I bought my first Diane von Furstenberg dress recently. Her clothing always catches my attention. It's bluish-green, my trademark color. I always wear blues and greens because of my eyes.

If you had a magical credit card that would never run up a bill, where would you take it?
I would use it all at Saks Fifth Avenue. That way I could buy everything, all the handbags and accessories I wanted, and pick up shoes on the way.

Meet The Style Gurus
Right, and with insider knowledge

1 The Suit

BOTH HEATHER AND LYN PICK STRIPED CALVIN KLEIN SUITS, BUT THEY INCLUDE DIFFERENT DETAILS. HEATHER PAIRS HERS WITH A SATEEN BUTTON-DOWN AND A PINK TIE, WHILE LYN GOES WITH A MORE CONSERVATIVE ROYAL BLUE SHIRT AND YELLOW TIE. LYN'S SUIT ALSO INCLUDES A VEST.

The Verdict

It's interesting that both Lyn and Heather picked similar suits with solid-color shirts and bright ties. I guess I'm a bright-tie kinda guy. But Heather's ensemble pushes my fashion boundaries farther than Lyn's—there's no sateen in my closet. On the other hand, Lyn included a vest, and I dig it. A suit with a vest would make me feel like I'm ready to make deals involving lots of money, which is exactly the way a suit should make you feel.

I'm afraid of department stores. They're a bounty of choice—and that's exactly the problem. I have a hard enough time in a place that sells only one brand of clothes, never mind 15. The flip side is that they might have everything you need all in one place, if only you could find it. Enter the personal shopper. The big department stores realize that they're competing for your attention and can differentiate themselves through service. These days personal shoppers are complimentary at stores like Nordstrom, Neiman Marcus and Macy's. To me, enlisting their services seems like a luxury, but how many luxuries are free?

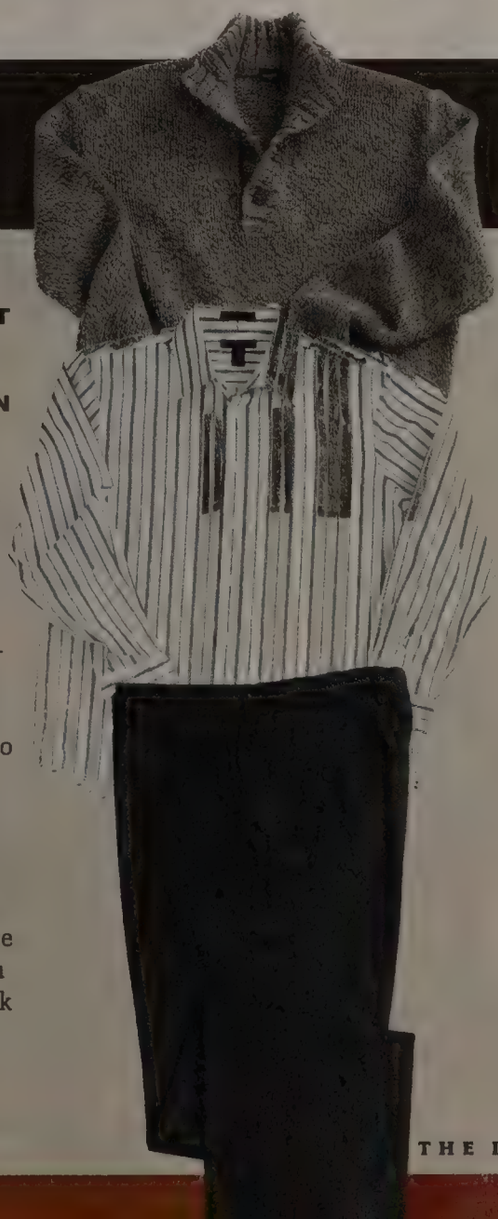
Besides helping you steer through the maze of options at a huge store, a personal shopper can also apply a fresh eye to your wardrobe, and that's what brought me to the Macy's By Appointment office at the downtown location. I had an experiment in mind: Lyn Feldman, the regional manager of MBA in New England, would scour the store and choose three outfits for me: one suit, one casual look and one out-on-the-town getup. Meanwhile, my wife, Heather, would also pick three outfits for me under the same parameters. Then we'd review what each of them chose, thus illustrating how a wardrobe might evolve with a fresh point of view. I expected Heather's choices to be safe—after all, she knows what I already wear and essentially dresses me—and Lyn's to include both a few land mines and a few items that would make me say, "I wouldn't have picked it off the rack myself, but it's pretty cool." Is that what really happened?

At the end of the day, I concluded that Heather wants a personal shopper more than I do. "This was really hard," she says, and she's got a point—shopping is hard, which is why my wardrobe still includes clothes that date to Pearl Jam's Ten. From my point of view, after trying the Macy's By Appointment service, I don't see why you wouldn't use it.

Think about it like this—we rely on experts to fix our cars, choose our stocks and help us navigate through life in a million little ways, so why wouldn't you call upon an expert to help you shop? They know the store inside and out, and after a few visits, they'll know you well enough to suggest items that push your fashion envelope without making you feel like you're being dressed by Mugatu from Zoolander. "We're not here to change you," Lyn says. "If you're comfortable with what you buy with us, that'll make you come back. Usually, after working with a consultant a couple times, she knows you, knows what the foundation of your wardrobe is, and how to build on that."

PERSONAL SHOPPERS PUSH YOUR FASHION ENVELOPE WITHOUT MAKING YOU FEEL LIKE YOU'RE BEING DRESSED BY MUGATU FROM ZOOLANDER.

One other thing I learned, a detail that's especially relevant this time of year: The Macy's MBA shoppers aren't limited to clothes. They have the run of the store, and they'll do your holiday shopping for you, even taking care of gift-wrapping. Now that really is a luxury. ✖✖✖



2 Casual Outfit

HEATHER PICKS LEVI'S 527S AND TWO TOPS: A ZIP-DOWN SWEATSHIRT OR A RIBBED SWEATER. LYN ALSO PICKS LEVI'S 527S, BUT WITH A BROWN SHIRT AND A VEST. SHE ALSO THROWS IN A SWEET LEATHER JACKET.

The Verdict

I'm wearing Levi's 527s as I stand here, so good call on those. I like Heather's choices for upper bodywear, but Lyn's are more fashion-forward. I'm especially drawn to the leather jacket, which is by Tommy Bahama, whom I normally associate with Hawaiian shirts. I probably couldn't see myself wearing the vest, but that's why we're here—to attempt to envision a vest-wearing future. I think I'd try it.

3 Out-on-the-town Outfit

THE OUT-ON-THE-TOWN GETUP IS MY MOST ILL-DEFINED MISSION FOR BOTH LADIES, WHICH IS PROBABLY THE REASON THEY COME BACK WITH WILDLY DIFFERENT CLOTHES. AM I LOOKING FOR AN OUTFIT FOR DINNER AT MISTRAL OR CLUBBING AT ESTATE?

The Verdict

The fisherman's sweater is exactly the kind of thing I hoped Lyn would pick out. I own nothing like it. Heather's outfit tests my limits, but for a different reason: I'm afraid of the color teal, and this shirt has teal stripes. Maybe I could wear it in Miami, but teal seems too jovial for Boston. People would laugh, "Why's that guy so happy? Look at him wearing teal." I never said my fashion sense was rational.

Simply Perfect. Toro's Celine Oringer is beautiful without the fuss.

In our Summer Dining issue we raved about our cover boy, chef/restaurateur Ken Oringer, and his fashionable array of Boston eateries. So when I met his wife, Celine, it came as no surprise that she was just as innovative and stylish as her husband (not to mention adorable, lighthearted and a total ham). And though it was immediately clear from her effortless, gorgeous outfit and flawlessly self-applied makeup why Oringer is one of Boston's most fashionable women, hearing her say "Love clothes, hate shopping" right off the bat gave me a moment of pause. This is, after all, our holiday shopping guide. And furthermore, if that's the secret to looking so good, then I need to seriously rethink my addiction to browsing.

By Amanda Knorr Photographs by Rebecca Bousquet

HIGH AND LOW: CELINE ORINGER SHOPS ALL AROUND TO ACHIEVE HER EFFORTLESS LOOK. SHE'S JUST AS HAPPY TRYING ON DRESSES AT INTERMIX AS JEANS AT FILENE'S BASEMENT. NOT TO MENTION FINDING ACCESSORIES, LIKE THE ONES SHE BROUGHT TO THE SHOOT.

"I really like to shop when I travel. It's easier that way," explained Oringer, who co-owns Toro. Eventually it dawned on me that, for her, shopping isn't a trip to the mall or a weekly stroll down Newbury Street; it's a collection of experiences, a gathering of items from here and abroad. Then it all falls into place. But since we didn't have plane tickets, much less a week to peruse the boutiques of Dubai or Milan, we spent the day hitting her favorite Boston shops to get a taste of what stimulates her fashion sense. It turns out that Oringer knows how to have fun.

Celine Dishes

Favorite accessory? Shoes! You can wear an outfit and have crummy shoes and feel bad, and then put on a pair of great shoes and feel sexy.

Style icon? Cameron Diaz. She always does her own thing and has fun.

Do you ever dress Ken? Ken dresses me sometimes! We like to dress each other. He picks out good clothes. [He also picked out the boots she wore to the shoot.]

Do you cook for him? I love cooking! He's easy to cook for: Do what you're good at and don't try to impress him. He likes it simple.

Favorite Boston stores? Filene's Basement, Gretta Luxe, Intermix.

Do you shop online? No, because I always wind up returning everything.

NEW KIDS, MEET BLOCK

Metal bands like Killswitch Engage and Shadows Fall may be getting the loudest fanfare at this year's Boston Music Awards, but spare a thought for the humble boy band. From New Edition to NKOTB, Boston is the dirty-water womb from which great guilty pleasures spring. But unlike some previous pop crazes, the Click Five, who'll perform at the 20th-anniversary BMA ceremony, have real songs and instruments—and even alt-pop credibility. Other performers include Lori McKenna, JoJo and Bobby Brown.

The Boston Music Awards take place Dec. 1 at the Orpheum Theatre, 1 Hamilton Place, Boston (617-931-2000). ticketmaster.com. 7:30 pm. $35-$100.

Mikes on the Mike

A Hairy Situation Guys in short shorts aren't exactly eye candy. But there's something about Michael Ian Black (below) and Michael Showalter that leave audiences wanting more. These pals from The State and Wet Hot American Summer appear at the Somerville Theatre to perform their stand-up and promote Black's comedy album, I'm a Wonderful Man. Though tiny sports attire isn't required, don't be surprised if the two come donning their summer-camp finest; we know how much Black loves the '80s. Liz Fiandaca

Across the Universe ★ Destined to become a camp classic, the latest tedious, hagiographic salute to the 1960s by a navel-gazing baby boomer is far weirder than your typical stroll down memory lane. Newton native Julie Taymor has fashioned a visually berserk, deathly earnest musical consisting entirely of Beatles songs sung by a cast of attractive moppets muttering hippy-dippy chestnuts, eventually realizing that, yes, all you need is love. There's little in the way of story or character, just a lot of Forrest Gump–ish historical signposts and laughable interpretations of Lennon and McCartney lyrics. All these kids have names like Jude, Lucy, Prudence and Sadie, and the only suspense comes from trying to guess when Taymor will shoehorn in the next awkward sing-along. It's a completely humorless, self-important affair that finally hits rock bottom once Bono turns up as a Ken Kesey wannabe to preach the wonders of LSD and warble something about being the walrus. The U2 frontman looks so uncomfortable onscreen, I spent half the number thinking he was Robin Williams. (In the suburbs.)

American Gangster ★★★ There's nothing you haven't seen a dozen times before in Ridley Scott's pulpy film that traces the rise and fall of Harlem's vicious heroin kingpin, Frank Lucas. But even an old tune can be catchy if it's played well, and it's hard to think of two actors who are more fun to watch right now than Denzel Washington and Russell Crowe. As the uptight Lucas, Denzel's Wall Street tailoring and Sidney Poitier diction makes him stand out like the lone Republican in a swarm of Superflys. By contrast, Crowe's slovenly, workaholic Jersey cop is a bundle of frayed nerves and ruined relationships, but he's the only man tireless enough to bring Lucas down. Steven Zaillian's screenplay is cobbled together from equal parts Scarface and Heat, but it's a blast to see the silky-smooth Washington bump up against Crowe's boisterous Pacino impersonation. Scott's direction is less ostentatious than usual, and he smartly stays out of their way. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Assassination of Jesse James by the Coward Robert Ford ★★★★ By turns mesmerizing, maddening and masterful, writer-director Andrew Dominik's bleak, hypnotic triumph is unlike anything you'll see this year, owing more to druggy, fatalistic '70s anti-Westerns like Robert Altman's McCabe and Mrs. Miller and Sam Peckinpah's Pat Garrett and Billy the Kid than to any traditional horse opera. Brad Pitt delivers his scariest, saddest performance yet as the notorious railroad bandit slowly rotting away thanks to paranoia and the heavy psychic toll of his outsized reputation. There's also a revelatory turn from Casey Affleck as the title's scaredy-cat who's dangerously obsessed with dime novels and James Gang fantasies, but is sorely unequipped to handle anything resembling reality. Sumptuously photographed by the great Roger Deakins as a painterly procession of lingering, forbidding landscapes that often threaten to swallow our characters whole, The Assassination of Jesse James blossoms into a moving, often sickly comic meditation on the power of myth, with these small men standing helpless before a giant inexorable tide of American legend. Long, but purposefully so, the movie haunts your dreams. (In the Suburbs.)

Bee Movie ★½ Those sobering statistics about disappearing bees may have something to do with climate change. Or it could be that our fuzzy friends are fleeing in embarrassment from Jerry Seinfeld's relentless promotional blitz for this lame kiddie movie. In case you somehow haven't heard, the stand-up comic lends his voice to Barry B. Benson, a curious insect who leaves the hive and strikes up an icky romance with Renée Zellweger's gurgly-voiced florist. When Barry discovers that humans have enslaved his fellow bees for the mass production of honey, a nonsensical lawsuit ensues, which prompts a slight ecological disaster and self-congratulatory cameos from the likes of Ray Liotta and Oprah. Seinfeld's milquetoast observational humor hasn't aged particularly well, and as typical of DreamWorks animated productions, the character designs are ugly and the backgrounds indistinct. It's hard to imagine what children are going to take away from this muddled affair, besides a sinister message to be mindful of your station in life and do what you're told. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Before the Devil Knows You're Dead ★★★½ Disproving the theory that folks mellow with age, 83-year-old director Sidney Lumet enters his fifth decade of filmmaking with the nastiest, most fatalistic thriller of his career. Philip Seymour Hoffman and Ethan Hawke star as financially strapped brothers who attempt to cover debts by knocking off a suburban jewelry store. It's literally a mom-and-pop operation run by their parents (Albert Finney and Rosemary Harris), which sends this seemingly simple bungled heist perilously close to Greek tragedy. Kelly Masterson's screenplay is a grim puzzle-box that zips back and forth through time to savor the Murphy's Law developments. In lesser hands, this could have been a glib

BAD APPLE ON THE FAMILY TREE

Margot at the Wedding
Starring Nicole Kidman, Jennifer Jason Leigh, Jack Black, John Turturro, Zane Pais and Ciarán Hinds. Written and directed by Noah Baumbach. At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.

WHAT ON EARTH did writer-director Noah Baumbach's parents ever do to deserve this? One of the great movie villains of recent years was played by Jeff Daniels in Baumbach's 2005 hit, The Squid and the Whale. As a failed novelist oozing toxic resentment of his wife's burgeoning literary career, Daniels harrumphed across the screen like a tweedy gorilla, spouting pseudo-intellectual put-downs and poisoning his children's minds in this comedy of divorce, '80s style. The period detail and brutal emotional honesty of the piece carried an air of autobiography, which led more than one critic to jump to sordid conclusions regarding the filmmaker's famous parents, novelist Jonathan Baumbach and Village Voice writer Georgia Brown. continued on page 90

Perfection has its price.

Of course it tastes better than other beers. We've had over 600 years to get the recipe right. Our esteemed brewery has been producing beer in Leuven since 1366. Which means we've been around a bit longer than most. Mind you, over the years our beer has witnessed the odd change or two. For instance, our customers no longer drink it to ward off the Plague, as they used to in medieval times. However, one thing has stayed the same after all these years. Stella Artois is still painstakingly brewed in a time-honored tradition with the choicest ingredients. Which is why our customers have kept coming back for more, even after 600 years.

I myself even wondered what Baumbach could have gotten daddy for Father's Day to make up for such a withering depiction.

I'm guessing now that the perfect peace offering just might have been the screenplay for Margot at the Wedding, which could easily be titled Squid 2: Now It's Mom's Turn.

Nicole Kidman stars as the worst mother since Medea, or at least since Livia Soprano: a neurotic, passive-aggressive bundle of nerves who begins the movie by dragging her androgynous, deeply confused adolescent son, Claude (Zane Pais), to an ill-advised reunion with her estranged sister Pauline (Jennifer Jason Leigh). A semi-famous writer who cannibalizes family secrets for New Yorker short stories, Margot is a monstrous creation incapable of opening her mouth without casually insulting everybody in the room or dragging every conversation back into her own solipsistic circle. She's a tireless source of self-created, endlessly perpetuated drama.

In other words, the movie would be unbearable if it weren't so damn funny.

Credit Kidman's fearless performance—a beautifully sustained aria of selfishness that lacks any of the protective, ironic distance that movie stars of her stature often place between themselves and such roles. She's fully committed, dug in and living it. So for one cringe-inducing scene after another, we're waiting for Margot's self-righteous bubble to burst, and yet somehow, each time she creates an awkward situation, she finds a way to say exactly the wrong thing and make circumstances infinitely worse.

The reunion was supposed to be a happy occasion, as Leigh's Pauline is getting remarried. A flighty Bennington grad who's dabbled in everything from slutdom to cults to drugs to self-help books in an attempt to find some sense of peace, she's finally fixed her future on dumpy, clinically depressed underachiever Malcolm (Jack Black), who wears a moustache "to be funny" and sometimes spends weeks on end composing angry letters to alt-weeklies in response to music reviews he considers ill-informed.

Is Pauline truly happy with Malcolm, or has she just latched on thinking he's her last chance? The fact that she's pregnant again isn't exactly aiding her judgment on the matter. But as you might imagine, dear Margot has a few opinions of her own, and the most annoying thing about her is that sometimes she's right.

Hilarious yet gratingly unpleasant, Baumbach's film mines the grim comedy of embarrassment to the point where you're squirming harder than you're laughing. Marked by jump cuts and a jittery, hand-held camera zoomed in a little too close for comfort, Margot at the Wedding has been constructed to keep you off-kilter and expecting the worst, which mimics the frazzled emotional states of these desperately unhappy characters.

For all its acclaim and considerable pleasures, The Squid and the Whale still struck me as a bit overdetermined. Baumbach spent years working on the screenplay, so its airtight thematic structure and swift running time ensured that every last line served a purpose. I guess that's admirable from a textbook perspective, but it also felt too meticulous and fussed-over for the rough, realistic vibe he seemed to be aiming for. Margot at the Wedding is a much shaggier, looser movie, even if it's only about 10 minutes longer. Baumbach still has a tendency to overwrite, and the symbolic import of a rotting family tree makes me wince a bit, but the extra screen time allotted for seemingly pointless digressions lends the movie an easier, more lifelike feel.

Kidman and Leigh (who just so happens to be Baumbach's wife) inhabit their roles with chameleonic vigor, and stellar supporting turns from John Turturro and Munich's Ciarán Hinds are relaxed and lived-in. Black, however, is sorely outclassed. He's got the improv comic's curse of always keeping one eyebrow raised for the audience and has yet to fully commit to a role. Watching him here, you can't help wishing Baumbach had just forked over the extra bucks and sprung for Philip Seymour Hoffman.

And as for Margot, well, she's not totally out of luck. I hear Larry David is dating again. ✖✖✖

Tarantino clone, but Lumet's austere, unobtrusive style allows his actors plenty of room to run and linger on old familial resentments, which develops an emotional resonance rare for this kind of gimmicky crime flick. As always, Hoffman is brilliant, his closed-off cruelty an excellent foil for Hawke's wounded puppy dog performance. (At Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Blade Runner: The Final Cut ★★★★ Twenty-five years after it was originally released and some 15 years since the previous "director's cut," Ridley Scott's landmark, retro-futuristic noir gets one last pass through the editing bay for a few minor alterations noticeable only to the most hard-core fans. What's most important is that the film has been painstakingly restored in a gorgeous 35mm print, and as Blade Runner's enduring power lies in its dreamy and immersive use of physical space, a theatrical viewing is practically mandatory. Sure, Harrison Ford's mopey performance as a depressed android hunter is still a gaping hole in the film, and ditto for his forbidden relationship with Sean Young's replicant, but it's a movie more interested in atmosphere, with a haunting, neon grandeur which casts a spell during even the slackest sequences. Besides, sourpuss Ford throws Rutger Hauer's iconic, electrifying villain into sharper focus, with the central irony here being that the most human character in the film just happens to be a robot. (At Coolidge Corner.)

The Bourne Ultimatum ★★★★ As propulsive, brilliantly assembled and breathlessly paced as any action picture I've seen, the third and finest chapter in this superior spy saga finds Matt Damon's amnesiac assassin heading home to New York City to put together the final, harrowing puzzle pieces of his lost identity. United 93 director Paul Greengrass shoots exclusively with handheld cameras, supercharging the impeccably choreographed cat-and-mouse sequences with a jittery, you-are-there immediacy. As always, Damon deftly underplays, communicating the character's inner torment strictly through his sleek physicality and haunted stare. Joan Allen returns as a jaded CIA operative who becomes Bourne's most unlikely ally, this time butting heads with David Strathairn's oily armchair warrior. These Bourne pictures have shrewdly updated Robert Ludlum's Cold War novels for our more distrustful, troubled times and seethe with a profound loss of faith in our leaders. There's also a harsh moral severity at work—the killings hurt and carry with them a tremendous psychological price. This is classy, sophisticated entertainment for adults, and an outstanding example of sheer, brute-force craftsmanship. (In the suburbs.)

Dan in Real Life ★★ Pleasant enough and almost instantly forgettable, this well-photographed romantic comedy stars Steve Carell as a down-on-his-luck widower with three cloyingly cute daughters. En route to a family reunion in Rhode Island, Carell falls hard for Juliette Binoche, not realizing she's his brother's new girlfriend. As his brother is played by Dane Cook, one must pause and wonder in what kind of cruel and unfair universe a sophisticated goddess like Juilette Binoche would date a loutish MySpace comedian. In any case, Carell and Binoche make goo-goo eyes and share longing glances throughout the most trite family get-together ever captured on film. John Mahoney and Dianne Wiest are on hand as the grandparents who, as if on cue, deliver knowing chestnuts of wisdom through wrinkly smiles. The movie is so self-consciously warm and cozy it might as well be wearing a big fuzzy sweater. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Darjeeling Limited ★★★½ Already an icon to skinny-jeaned, suit-coated hipsters everywhere, director Wes Anderson makes a giant leap forward with this lyrical, melancholy tale of three estranged brothers traveling through India by train in an attempt to reconnect and find some sort of spiritual enlightenment. It's probably impossible to keep thoughts of Owen Wilson's well-publicized personal problems from affecting one's perception of his dark and impressive turn as the domineering oldest sibling, while Adrien Brody and Jason Schwartzman (who co-wrote the screenplay with Anderson and Roman Coppola) offer some very funny, sort-of-sad turns as similarly stunted man-children. Anderson's obsessive-compulsive set design, obnoxious color-coding and meticulous widescreen compositions can often feel like asphyxiating affectations, but somewhere along the way, Darjeeling blossoms into his messiest and most moving film to date, with flights of whimsy grounded for the first time in very human pain and confusion. The central motif, about letting go of baggage both physical and emotional, is annoyingly literal, but the obtuseness doesn't make it any less deeply felt. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Eastern Promises ★★★ David Cronenberg strikes again with this graphic, grisly and entertaining tale. No great shakes in the screenplay department, this peculiar Russian mafioso saga was penned by Dirty Pretty Things scribe Steven Knight and has something to do with the lineage of a mysterious orphan—delivered in graphic detail, with maximum splattery viscera, by Naomi Watts' nosey midwife. The dead mom's secret diary leads our heroine on a tour of the Trans-Siberian underworld, where Armin Mueller-Stahl insinuates all sorts of suspect shenanigans. But the real draw is Viggo Mortensen, who seethes behind wraparound sunglasses and a museum's worth of telling tattoos. As a slippery chauffeur, he has a secret or two that he doesn't particularly feel like sharing, and Mortensen's captivating, nearly silent performance glues you to your seat despite some mildly ridiculous plot turns. Cronenberg, using the script as a mere launching pad for his particular brand of bodily havoc, climaxes early with a berserk, full-frontal bathhouse smackdown that ranks as one of the greatest fight scenes ever filmed. (In the suburbs.)

Not So Sweet

Buyer Beeware If you haven't already succumbed to the media swarm, let's just say Bee Movie stings as bad as a barrage of honey-related puns. Hive a nice day.

Elizabeth: The Golden Age ★½ It might have boasted the breakout performance that rocketed Aussie firebrand Cate Blanchett to international superstardom, but it's worth remembering that 1998's Elizabeth was also a slightly silly picture, with some sly supporting turns keeping the overwrought melodrama from teetering over into camp. Alas, this soppy, belated sequel can't manage such a balancing act and inspires unintentional guffaws from the get-go. Perhaps realizing that the first picture developed a video afterlife as a favorite of teenage girls, director Shekhar Kapur has instructed Blanchett to play the 52-year-old monarch as if auditioning for High School Musical 3. Those dastardly Spanish Catholics are about to invade, but our Virgin Queen is busy giggling girlishly and being all moony-eyed for Clive Owen's Sir Walter Raleigh. Owen seems to be channeling Fabio as he prances around in a hilarious collection of costumes while over-enunciating cringe-worthy double entendres. Kapur's magisterial overhead shots and swirling 360-degree dolly shots are more headache-inducing than evocative. (In the suburbs.)

Fred Claus ★ The mere idea of Vince Vaughn playing Santa Claus' loser brother is enough to make you laugh. Throw in the brilliant casting of Paul Giamatti as Saint Nick, and it's hard not to imagine Fred Claus as a holiday classic waiting to happen. But what should've been a diversion as light as 2003's Elf ends up feeling as laborious as that legendary 1985 Dudley Moore dud, Santa Claus: The Movie. Lavishly overbudgeted with enormous eyesore sets and creepy prosthetic makeup work, director David Dobkin's film ladles out enough plotlines for three separate movies and leaves Vaughn stuck sputtering some disappointingly PG riffs, unsure if he should rescue an orphan sidekick, reunite with his annoying girlfriend (Rachel Weisz) or try to keep Kevin Spacey's officious efficiency expert from closing Santa's workshop. Unable to even follow its own tortured logic, the movie veers from one overblown, saccharine set piece to another over a mirthless two hours. Bah, humbug. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Gone Baby Gone ★★★ Good news: Ben Affleck isn't embarrassing anymore. With his confident, downbeat directorial debut, the artist formerly known as Bennifer redeems himself, exhibiting a fantastic knack for getting the most out of Boston's grimmer locations while supplying a star-making role for his kid brother, Casey. Based on the novel by Dennis Lehane, Gone Baby Gone digs deep into the buried secrets of the Dorchester projects after the mysterious disappearance of a 4-year-old girl. As a conscience-stricken private detective, the younger Affleck is a modern-day Phillip Marlowe in a tracksuit as he navigates grungy barrooms and flings four-letter words before arriving at a moral dilemma that's all but impossible to resolve. The picture loses considerable steam in its second hour, with too many expository sequences required to resolve Lehane's knotty plotting. But the extraordinary final shot will provoke discussion and argument long after the closing credits have rolled and announces not just a morally complex vision, but also the arrival of a potentially great filmmaker. Who knew Ben still had it in him? (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix ★★★½ The Harry Potter films thus far have felt like a collection of tie-in products dutifully recreating everybody's favorite scenes as if genuflecting before the Stations of the Cross. But now, four sequels into this saga, it finally feels like we're watching an honest-to-god movie. Forced to slash JK Rowling's unwieldy 870-page novel to a trim two hours and change, director David Yates and screenwriter Michael Goldenberg have at last reconceived the Potterverse in purely cinematic terms. They scrapped all that Quidditch nonsense and zero in on Harry's adolescent struggle to wrap his still-forming mind around the fallibility of authority figures, the finality of death and the stinking unfairness of how the world really works. It's a surprisingly dark and violent coming-of-age tale, and Yates finds some nifty visual parallels for the character's inner journey. Young Daniel Radcliffe is growing into the role quite nicely, and the most overqualified supporting cast in history again excels, with extra kudos going to Gary Oldman, Alan Rickman and Imelda Staunton's fascist schoolmarm. (In the suburbs.)

The Heartbreak Kid ★★ In this remake reeking of desperation, brothers Peter and Bobby Farrelly attempt to graft their patented schtick onto Elaine May's 1972 classic by eschewing the original's tricky tone in favor of four-letter words and bodily functions. The increasingly tiresome Ben Stiller does his uptight, slow-burn routine once again, muttering under his breath as his blonde bombshell bride (the charming and apparently fearless Malin Akerman) reveals herself to be all too human, then flipping for Michelle Monaghan's mousy, rather boring girl next door. The verbal vulgarity isn't nearly as amusing as the Farrellys seem to think it is, especially with Stiller's real-life dad Jerry in an embarrassing turn as a foul-mouthed old pervert. Putting profanity in the mouths of the elderly is the last refuge of screenwriters who've run out of ideas, and The Heartbreak Kid all but curls up and dies onscreen once Akerman's endearing stumblebum gets unfairly shifted to villain status. Also, Carlos Mencia is in the film, and there's simply no excuse for that. (In the suburbs.)

Into the Wild ★★★½ In 1990, Christopher McCandless (Emile Hirsch) donated his life savings to Oxfam, burned his Social Security card and disappeared down the highway into self-imposed obscurity. Rechristening himself "Alexander Supertramp," McCandless yearned to live the kind of pure existence he'd only read about in books by Henry David Thoreau and Jack London. Two years later he starved to death inside an abandoned bus in Alaska, barely 20 miles from the highway. Plenty of people consider McCandless a hero. Countless folk songs have been written about his journey, and that bus has become a popular tourist attraction. Just as many people, especially in Alaska, will tell you he was an idiot. The beauty of this film, written and directed by Sean Penn, is that it's both dreamy and lucid and filled with a deep respect for McCandless' ideals, but it never lets him off the hook for the spitefulness and naiveté inherent in his foolish, transcendent quest. It feels like a breakthrough for Penn as it throbs with color, possibilities and hope. (In the suburbs.)

The Kingdom ★★★ A bruising action flick with unfortunate delusions of social relevance, this extremely well-made procedural stars Jamie Foxx, Jennifer Garner, Chris Cooper and Jason Bateman as FBI agents dispatched to Saudi Arabia to investigate the terrorist bombing of an oil company housing facility. Adopting both the gruff aura of no-nonsense machismo and the advanced high-def video techniques pioneered by the film's producer (Michael Mann), Friday Night Lights director Peter Berg moves these largely by-the-numbers proceedings along briskly and purposefully until pulling out all the stops for the film's final 30 minutes—a knock-down, drag-out climax boasting the most impeccable combat choreography this side of Jason Bourne. That last hellzapoppin' reel is rousing enough to make you forget about the goofy Oil Crisis for Dummies prologue or the lazy central performance from Jamie Foxx, who seems to assume his sunglasses will do all the acting for him. Garner stands around infuriating the locals in skintight tank tops, but Bateman undercuts all the testosterone with some much-appreciated improvisational banter. (In the suburbs.)

Lars and the Real Girl ★★½ Genuine sweetness wrestles with whimsy-overload in director Craig Gillespie's gentle tale of a lonely, emotionally stunted young man (Ryan Gosling, laying it on a little thick) who orders a sex doll over the Internet and deludes himself into thinking she's real. Yes, this sounds incredibly icky, but Six Feet Under scribe Nancy Oliver's screenplay is surprisingly chaste, choosing to focus mainly on the affecting little ways this small snowy community tries to help their troubled neighbor by playing along with his fantasy. The best work comes from up-and-coming actor Paul Schneider, who recently stole scenes left and right in The Assassination of Jesse James, here playing Gosling's conflicted older brother with a stillness and warmth that trumps his costar's overly mannered turn. Gillespie is a bit too in love with the wintry atmospherics and lets the pace slacken until the audience ends up two or three scenes ahead of the movie. Some nice moments, though. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Lions for Lambs ★½ Probably one of the least cinematic movies ever made, Robert Redford's latest directorial effort seeks to engage, alarm and activate an apathetic American public. Unfortunately, the road to hell is paved with good intentions, and Lions for Lambs mistakenly assumes there's nothing more energizing or entertaining than watching movie stars sit around in drab offices lecturing one another about the war on terror. Redford plays a disillusioned college professor chastising a callow slacker while his two favorite students (Derek Luke and Michael Peña) get shot down in Afghanistan and groan in agony for dramatic counterpoint. Meanwhile, back in D.C., Tom Cruise is a lip-smackingly evil Republican senator, yapping in circles around Meryl Streep's burnt-out journalist. Cruise's delicious insincerity is the only entertaining thing in the film as he regurgitates neocon talking points and flashes that trademark toothy grin. Eventually you start to feel like Redford's beleaguered student, spending an hour and a half on the receiving end of a blustery, condescending sermon from an out-of-touch old man. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Lust, Caution ★★ The title could probably apply to any of Ang Lee's pictures, from The Ice Storm to Brokeback Mountain, as this immensely gifted filmmaker has made a career out of chronicling the countless heartbreaking ways our basic human emotions are often thwarted and repressed by rigid codes of social conduct. Strange then that this film is such a non-starter. Adapted by Lee's regular screenwriters, James Schamus and Wang Hui-ling, from a short story by Eileen Chang, this WWII drama stars newcomer Wei Tang as an ambitious drama student in occupied Shanghai who seduces a sadistic government official (Hong Kong movie legend Tony Leung) as part of a recklessly conceived assassination plan. Bloated and sluggish, the movie substitutes unpleasantly graphic, confusingly acrobatic sex scenes for emotional connections. Leung's natural charisma, so blinding in films by John Woo and Wong Kar-wai, has been muffled down to a dull authoritarian drone. There's simply not enough going on between the lines to support the epic running time. (In the suburbs.)

Michael Clayton ★★★½ Another whip-smart, politically savvy flick from star/executive producer George Clooney, who cements his status as a throwback to the age of heavyweight leading men with enough gravitas to handle flawed, complicated leading roles. Clooney's title character, a burnt-out fixer for a big-money Manhattan law firm, finds himself growing a conscience after witnessing the shabby treatment of his esteemed colleague (the great Tom Wilkinson) when the latter threatens to blow a billion-dollar lawsuit over a carcinogenic weed-killer. Shot primarily in metallic shades of gray by cinematographer Robert Elswit, Bourne-trilogy screenwriter Tony Gilroy's impressively lean directorial debut has little patience for soft-hearted pieties or conventional modern uplift. The kind of stark, paranoid star vehicle that probably would have been a summer blockbuster back in the early '70s, Michael Clayton oozes class and adult sophistication. Clooney carries the picture on his weary shoulders, subtle glimmers of long-buried idealism slowly dawning behind his downcast eyes. The picture's stirring climax isn't physical but instead a verbal boxing match that's more exciting than most shoot-outs. (At Boston Common, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

No Country for Old Men ★★★★ Adapted from the 2005 novel by Cormac McCarthy, Joel and Ethan Coen's No Country for Old Men is an enthralling, devastating movie experience. Stripped to the bone, it's a model of ruthless narrative efficiency that blossoms into something much larger than the sum of its precision-tooled parts. What at first seems like the simple saga of two tough hombres and a bag of money eventually attains a mythic, almost Biblical grandeur. For days afterwards, it haunts your dreams—the bad ones. The Coens have at last gone back to their roots, infusing No Country with the clockwork meticulousness and parched landscapes of their killer 1984 debut, Blood Simple. The movie is almost unbearably suspenseful and boasts the filmmakers' trademark strain of sicko gallows humor. But there's also something new here: a palpable sense of sorrow and genuine emotional resonance. For the first time in their brilliant career, it finally feels like the merry pranksters are out to do more than crack themselves up. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Redacted ★★ Outraged and outrageous, Brian De Palma's daring mixed-media assemblage fictionalizes a real-life atrocity involving the rape and murder of a teenage girl by U.S. troops stationed in Iraq, then refracts the event through all sorts of blogs, fake documentaries, YouTube videos and surveillance footage. It's a gambit so bold I wish it had worked, but the results are as dramatically inert as they are dazzling. Hobbled by an extremely poor screenplay (penned by the director himself) and some of the worst community-theater–level acting ever seen in an professional motion picture, these characters aren't even stereotypes, they're sketches of stereotypes, and the plot often demands improbable monologues spelling out what was already implied. De Palma covered the same subject matter with a good deal more grace (not to mention a much more talented cast) in his 1989 film Casualties of War, and Redacted's media mashup recalls the filmmaker's previous experimental, anti-Vietnam pictures, Greetings and Hi, Mom!, but it's missing the quicksilver wit that made his earlier work sting. (At Kendall Square.)

Rendition ★½ The appalling practice of shipping U.S. terror suspects overseas for some, shall we say, creative methods of questioning is a matter that deserves better treatment than this tedious talking-points memo from Tsotsi director Gavin Hood. Reese Witherspoon spends a surprisingly paltry amount of screen time weeping and wandering around Washington pregnant after her Egyptian husband (Aramis Knight) gets mistakenly shuttled off for some strategic electrocutions in a deliberately unnamed North African

Bad Reality

Don't Go There Brian DePalma's Redacted, based on atrocities committed by U.S. troops, falls victim to its own poor screenplay and terrible acting.

country. Jake Gyllenhaal, usually the soft, mushy center of films much better than this one, simpers through the movie in a drunken stupor as a squeamish CIA agent. ("This is my first torture," he slurs; it's the only good line.) Admirable in its muckraking intentions, Rendition is also maddeningly vague and underwritten. Kelley Sane's screenplay grants the one-dimensional characters platforms instead of identities, with Meryl Streep as a lip-smacking villain so cardboard and simplistic she'd seem over-the-top in a Bond film. A pointless time-shifting plot twist at the last minute only underscores how little of what we've seen has actually mattered. (In the suburbs.)

Things We Lost in the Fire ★★ Is there a harder-working actress than Halle Berry? I'm not referring to the number of roles she plays but rather the unbelievable strain they seem to place upon her. Every telegraphed emotion or stilted line appears to exhaust this woman. She might be the most self-conscious performer in movies today. Berry's up to her usual hysterical tricks in this downbeat drama—the English-language debut from acclaimed Danish filmmaker Susanne Bier. After the sudden death of her husband (David Duchovny) supplies Berry with more unconvincing Oscar clips, she invites his childhood friend (Benicio Del Toro) to come and live above their garage. As a lifelong loser battling a heroin habit, Del Toro is a wonder to behold as he finds new behavioral tics and approaches to a been-there, done-that junkie role. Too bad Bier's overwrought direction favors close-ups on eyeballs, and Allan Loeb's script can't resist spelling out everything that should be implied. The film scarcely deserves such an amazing performance. (In the suburbs.)

30 Days of Night ★½ The idea is so logical, you wonder why nobody's thought of it before. Of course vampires would migrate to Alaska, where they can enjoy an uninterrupted month of darkness and not have to hide in their coffins all day! Alas, such a killer premise is squandered in director David Slade's awkward, icky adaptation of the graphic novel by Steve Niles and Ben Templesmith. Josh Hartnett is vacant and unconvincing as a beleaguered sheriff who rallies a handful of survivors against this epic siege of nosferatus, and somehow gets back together with his ex-wife (Melissa George) in the process. The logistics of his plan are consistently muddled. It's often impossible to discern where these people are hiding, what they subsist on all month or why they keep exposing themselves for the most arbitrary reasons. Slade and cinematographer Jo Willems have digitally finessed the colors of every frame to resemble panels of a comic, but the pretty pictures don't add up to much. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

2 Days in Paris ★★★ The enchanting Julie Delpy makes her directorial debut and stars in this very funny, if slightly uneven, culture-clash farce that follows a bickering young couple's strained 48 hours in the City of Light. Just don't expect the dreamy romanticism of the similarly structured Delpy vehicle Before Sunset, as here she and real-life ex Adam Goldberg mine all sorts of awkward and uncomfortable comedic scenarios that present Paris as swarming with psycho cabdrivers, elderly nymphomaniacs and sleazy former lovers lurking around every corner. A muscled, tattooed Goldberg borrows Woody Allen's timing and delivery as he plays a jittery hypochondriac aghast at the parade of exes Delpy's loopy photographer keeps bumping into. Surprisingly enough, 2 Days in Paris sports almost as many penis jokes as Superbad, as well as the inspired use of an arsonist, vegan guardian angel. Delpy's use of handheld cameras and jump cuts pay cheeky homage to the French New Wave, but occasionally the filmmaking becomes so frazzled you wish she'd back off just a bit. (In the suburbs.)

We Own the Night ★★½ Two great set pieces in search of a movie, writer-director James Gray's humorless retro-drama stars Joaquin Phoenix as a coked-up club promoter who doesn't realize how deep he's in with the Russian mob until his estranged cop brother (an uncharacteristically dull Mark Wahlberg) busts his disco. Robert Duvall gives a marvelous performance as the family's hard-nosed policeman patriarch, oozing disappointment and disapproval through every forced grin. Gorgeously photographed by Joaquín Baca-Asay, We Own the Night has a dank, lived-in sense of impending doom and boasts a midmovie raid on a crack den that's executed with nerve-jangling aplomb. Even better is the most original car chase in years, which takes place during a torrential downpour and locks viewers into the driver's claustrophobic field of vision. It's an astounding sequence in a movie that falls apart soon after. As in his previous films, Little Odessa and The Yards, Gray takes the hoary genre chestnuts of 1930s gangster pictures and saps the life out of them with solemn self-importance. (In the suburbs.)

TAP MASTER

Mockumentary genius Christopher Guest comes to play.

Christopher Guest Meets Berklee
at the Berklee Performance Center Nov. 30.

Matthew Simmons/Getty Images

FOR DIRECTOR-ACTOR Christopher Guest, comedy and music are intertwined. It's a common pairing.

"A lot of comedians I know are very connected to music and many times have musical gifts," says the 59-year-old Guest, whose ensemble of actors played their own instruments in A Mighty Wind, a 2003 send-up of the '60s folk scene. Guest, Michael McKean and Harry Shearer anchored that cast as the Folksmen, a stylistic flip from their vanguard roles as the members of the heavy metal band Spinal Tap in the 1984 film that forged Guest's improvisatory fake documentary style.

Guest himself was a folk musician, who grew up in Greenwich Village at the height of the scene portrayed in A Mighty Wind, and played with Arlo Guthrie during high school at the Stockbridge School continued on page 106 of Massachusetts. Then he plugged in to rock 'n' roll, joining Lenny & the Squigtones (based on leader McKean's Laverne & Shirley character) for a 1979 tour that tanked, providing fodder for This Is Spinal Tap. "We went from flying to driving," says Guest, "getting to these places and going backstage where there'd be half a sandwich and a pitcher of water. That was for the band."

Guest didn't pursue jazz, although he sees the correlation between that musical mode and his improvisational comedies, which follow a premise if not a script. "You have to know the key you're playing in," he says from his L.A. home. "You can't violate the story the same way you can't have a guy playing in B flat when you're playing in C. Everybody [in the films] knows, and then you're following a progression, which is basically the way the scene unfolds. And you don't need a rehearsal. That's the beauty of improvisation."

Guest adds that there are only a handful of actors who can pull off the trick. "There are quite a few jazz players who can improvise. You go into a jazz club and they know how to do that. You go into an improvisational [comedy] club and it's a long night."

Luckily student musicians rather than comedians will join Guest for a Nov. 30 Berklee show named These Go To 11 (after his bone-headed Spinal Tap guitarist's claim that his amps are louder because the dials go a notch above 10).

The tour tanked.

"We went from flying to driving, getting to these places and going backstage where there'd be half a sandwich and a pitcher of water. That was for the band."

Berklee students and faculty will be interpreting music from This Is Spinal Tap, A Mighty Wind and Waiting for Guffman, his 1996 spoof on community theater. "I can never remember the words, but I can remember the music really easily," says Guest, who's also slated to receive an honorary music doctorate from Berklee. "So I'll have to learn the words—or not sing and just play along. That would be fine. It's way more interesting, to be honest, to hear how students would play it than to hear me play it."

Though Spinal Tap occasionally tours, don't expect Guest to don his Nigel Tufnel getup from that band any more than the puffy gray hair of his Alan Barrows character in A Mighty Wind. He cites recent shows in New York and L.A. where he mixed songs from both of those films with Shearer and McKean, his musical partner since they studied acting at New York University in the late '60s. "We just played in regular, sort-of-grownup clothing without wigs or fake moustaches or fake bald heads or whatever. And it was a major relief to just walk in there with your instrument."

But what if the Berklee students dress up, perhaps even acting out the community-theater absurdities of Waiting for Guffman, which Guest says he and co-writer Eugene Levy are ironically "attempting to adapt" as a Broadway musical.

"That would be a little scary," says Guest, whose other current project is recording an instrumental album. "I'm not privy to that part of it. I would hope that people would just play the music, but you never know."

As for juxtaposing such opposite styles as metal and folk, he suggests that musicians from both worlds can be "full of themselves" in different, often funny ways. "It's just a different way of looking at people," Guest says. "Again, I could virtually pick any kind of occupation [for a film] and it's going to interest me, because the more arcane it is, the more interesting it is to me. It could be shoe repair. Count me in." ✖✖✖

And Girls Probably Like You, Too

Four Score When Boys Like Girls appeared on the Boston scene in 2005, America's need for yet another power pop foursome wasn't exactly pressing. But since their eponymous debut album streaked across radio playlists, trailing fire and burning up superlatives, it's become hard to imagine the current state of rock without them. Perhaps it's the catchy hooks. Or perhaps it's the lyrics about liking girls. Or perhaps it's because the band is Boston's hottest music export since John Mayer dropped out of Berklee. Boys Like Girls perform Nov. 23 at the Palladium.

Empyrean, n., The Highest Heaven

The Web as Artistic Manna

A young artist-in-residence brandishes his keen eye for color and detail in Cliff Evans: Empyrean at the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum. With images found on the Internet, Evans creates collages of the conflicts of our time the way Salvador Dalí or Sergeant Pepper might have done. Set your Facebook profiles to public, because your spring break could become social commentary.

Hooked on Fonicks

Christmas Is Easy

Throw up a tree, string on some lights and everything comes together for one big night. Now Chanukah, that's a marathon not a sprint—eight full days of revelry that include flaming menorahs and countless games of dreidel. The contributors to How to Spell Chanukah (including Steve Almond, above) lay it all out for Jews and gentiles alike. On Nov. 27, three of them gather to read from the collection at the Union St. Bar & Grille. Aunt Esther's latkes not included.

Rockie Horoscope {ROCKIE GARDINER}

LIKE WATER OFF A DUCK

[NOVEMBER 21-DECEMBER 4, 2007]
Steel yourself for the very real probability that Uranus, changing direction in your Pisces house of domesticity and family affairs, could have a dramatic impact on your plans for the Thanksgiving holiday. But be glad that the agile Centaur is able to make whatever adjustments may be necessary without so much as breaking a sweat. However, handling natives of the fixed signs won't be easy; they stick to their guns—while Cancer and Capricorn, the cardinal traditionalists, will insist on sticking to the menu.

CAPRICORN [December 22–January 20]
No matter how involved you are in your career or a community event, it's your partner who's likely to be the object of attention from the governing powers. Mars in your Cancer marriage house may receive an opportunity to become involved in whatever popular project Venus in judicious Libra has in mind. Meanwhile, your pragmatic Saturn ruler, in the discerning sign of Virgo, puts you in an excellent position to give good advice, especially about financial matters, including the "dream come true" you hope to find under your Christmas tree.

AQUARIUS [January 21–February 18]
Aquarius is one of the signs on the verge of falling head over heels into infatuation during the compelling attraction between Venus and Mars this week. It's primarily because imaginative Neptune in your sign envisions more than what meets the eye that makes you so vulnerable to the passing glance or casual touch on the arm. But now that you've been warned, let's hope that you can thread your way through the chaos that may result from your Uranus ruler's turnaround on Nov. 24. You should feel the tremors a few days before.

PISCES [February 19–March 19]
Again, reading for Aquarius may give you a heads-up on what could be in store for the Fish when Uranus in your sign comes out of retrograde after five months lying dormant. Plus, you'll be warned well in advance of the fantasy that might get out of hand when romantic Venus perfects a rewarding air sign trine to your über-romantic Neptune ruler. Artists can take this inspirational connection to glorious new heights, but how will you express it, and could your interpretation land you behind bars? "But I did it for love" might not fly.

ARIES [March 20–April 19]
If you concentrate on romance and its infinite variety, then you won't have the time or the inclination to think about the ramifications of Thanksgiving and how long they'll last. (With your Mars ruler retrograde for 11 weeks, probably too long.) But back to the lovey-dovey stuff and Venus' sojourn in your Libra marriage house: The goddess can draw attractive people to your side until she moves into sexy Scorpio on Dec. 5. But it's how she comes on to Mars this week, and the banter that follows, that'll keep you hooked.

TAURUS [April 20–May 20]
Every time your romantic Venus ruler contacts sexy Mars, something exciting—well, at least interesting—follows. Such is the case this week, and while the "meet cute" can take place at any time and in any location, you might want to pay particular attention to the reaction you get from folks in the workplace, both yours and wherever else you go, e.g., the market, the gym, the cleaners. Then, as the week progresses, a smitten Venus will come under the spell of idealistic Neptune, and their connection could have you walking on clouds.

GEMINI [May 21–June 20]
It's likely that loving Venus in your Libra house of romance and recreation will cost you real money if you pursue the various pleasures the goddess offers. So what! Since her annual visit only lasts a few weeks anyway, you might as well try to gather all the benefits she's willing to hand out. Just be aware that shortly after Thanksgiving, nebulous Neptune becomes a force when it completes the airy-fairy grand trine that's been building between Aquarius, Libra and Gemini. Will your new job bring you back to earth?

CANCER [June 21–July 22]
You never know where or when the love bug will bite. Keep this in mind as you wend your way through the long Thanksgiving weekend visiting friends and, because romantic Venus is passing through the old neighborhood, relatives and former classmates. It's the classic attraction between horny Mars, currently in your sign, and magnetic Venus in lovable Libra that is responsible for the sparks flying every which way. Although Mars will remain in Cancer for what'll feel like forever, Venus moves on early next month. Carpe diem.

LEO [July 23–August 22]
There's a lot of chattering going on in your chart thanks to Mercury passing through your Scorpio house of domestic affairs and real estate matters. Maybe the conversation will center on the Thanksgiving feast; maybe you'll have money matters to discuss when Uranus in your house of investments and insurance changes direction and, once again, looks to the future instead of the past. But if all that talking wears on your nerves, as well it might, you can find relief in a recreational activity, especially the heart-thumping kind.

VIRGO [August 23–September 22]
Right now your tuned-in Mercury ruler is the busiest of the planets, hopping from pillar to post and exchanging messages with most of the signs along the way. Seriously, while the Messenger of the Gods transits your Scorpio house of communication, commerce and commuting, you can't help but play a crucial role at Command Central. Just make sure you leave enough time free to deal with the sudden changes in a relationship that may occur when unpredictable Uranus in your Pisces house of partners comes out of retrograde on Nov. 24.

LIBRA [September 23–October 22]
It may seem redundant, but while your lovable and loving Venus ruler is in your sign, there's no reason to direct your attention to anything else. Certainly not while virile Mars in nurturing Cancer is devising a plan to seduce the goddess over the holiday weekend. Will the bait take the form of a deep-fried turkey or a devilishly delicious stuffing? There's also an addictive element to this scheme that might not show up until amorphous Neptune, ruler of mind-altering substances, lavishes Venus and you with its gifts as the holiday ends.

SCORPIO [October 23–November 21]
Anytime there's a possibility that you can hook up, the Scorpion needs to know when, the whys and the wherefores. Since you have two ruling planets, Mars and Pluto, and they both convey passion and determination, you'll be pleased (unless you're very much married) to learn that your Mars coruler, in the empathetic water sign of Cancer, is about to chance a romantic relationship with Venus. How serious it'll be and how long it'll last depend in part on how things progress once Venus enters Scorpio on Dec. 5. Anticipation.

KELLY
AUTOMOTIVE GROUP

The Kelly Automotive Group Offers Answers to the Frequently Pondered Questions of Car Buyers.

In a world when the internet offers an array of endless automotive data, there are still fundamental questions consumers struggle with every day. So, Brian Kelly, President of the Kelly Automotive Group has produced a series of videos that answer some of these questions, in a detailed, yet easy to understand manner, without a business agenda.

There are four such videos...

- Lease Or Buy
- Best Way To Finance
- How To Read A Car Ad
- How To Choose A Dealer

"I am asked these questions everywhere I go," Brian Kelly explains. "It's time the public has a professional and inside explanation. At first glance, it would be logical to assume these videos are elongated Kelly commercials, but refreshingly they are not."

All four videos are there for your immediate viewing, right now, at kellyauto.com

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286. www.irishconnec tion.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall-Quincy market area of Boston and is known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef and of course, Mother Sweeney's corned beef, a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself. For thirty years, The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftains, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

This favorite sports bar can transform into a party hangout as the weekends have a resident DJ.

THE HARP [85 Causeway St., Boston 617-742-1010. www.harpboston.com] Voted Boston Magazine's "Best After The Game", the Harp is a favorite downtown hotspot any day of the week, located directly across from the TD Banknorth Garden. Featuring live bands upstairs from Boston, Philadelphia and New York plus DJs spinning tunes downstairs, on Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights set the pace for the great high-energy environment. The Harp provides a crowd-pleasing menu with tastes from around the globe. Located in the heart of downtown Boston, the Harp also serves as an excellent meeting place for business luncheons, social gatherings and events.

BRUNCH

CLERY'S [113 Dartmouth Street, Boston, 617-262-9874. www.irishconnection. com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar earned the title of the 2002-2006 Best of Boston's Best Neighborhood bar, serving more than 400 regulars. Enjoy one of the 16 draught beers either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle weather of New England turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818. www.irishconnection.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. Accented by dark bamboo woodwork and large banana fans, it's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Relax with a Blueberry Pie Martini in the warmly lit lounge or an ice cold beer on the patio. Then retire to the dining room where you can browse the eclectic Continental menu featuring a variety of items, including pan seared tuna salad, steak sirloin, shrimp tempura, Gourmet prosciutto pizza and more. Also featuring a tapas bar, perfect for sharing, w-ith tasty bites such as Fried Aubergine, Chicken & Chorizo, and Saigon Scallops. Dillon's is open seven days a week from 10:00 a.m. – 2 a.m., serving brunch on Saturday and Sunday beginning at 10:00 a.m.

ATTENTION BOUNTY HUNTERS! BONUS POINTS TO ANYONE WHO CAN CAPTURE IMPROPER READERS AT THE ANNUAL WORLD'S BIGGEST LIAR COMPETITION CONVINCING US THEY'RE NOT ACTUALLY THERE. NOV. 22, WASDALE ENGLAND

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip. Where did you take us? Send us a picture of you or a buddy, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed IMPROPER Sightings.

Marita Riviero, Darryl Settles, Richard DeAgazio and Mary Jo Meisner brought the Celtics to China, where the C's defeated the Red Army in a landslide.

Matthew Nadeau took on Oktoberfest in Munich, Germany, and after only one drunken night had many lederhoes in different area codes.

The Gutners and the Rubins were in Anaheim for the Red Sox' ALDS-clinching win. Pity the Angels never showed up to see it.

Kids' Stuff...

What's more fun than a barrel of monkeys and bound to make you wish you'd remembered the hand sanitizer?

The Children's Museum, which underwent a gazillion-dollar rehab that was worth every penny. On hand for the black-tie Grand Reopening Gala Celebration were cochairs Robin and Tripp Jones and Linda Carlisle and Bob Mast, power couple Milton and Joan Wallace Benjamin, the breathtakingly beautiful Christine Tuchler with her husband, Andrew, übergroovers Alison and Ned Gordon, puckish pair Christine Bennett and Kevin Richard, Chronicle cutie Mary Richardson and her other half, Stan Leven, harbor mistress Vivien Li and Barking Crab owner Scott Garvey, the ever-delightful Linda Schwabe and bubbly blonde TV babe Jenny Johnson, who was wearing a short gold dress but still made it down the three-story climbing enclosure without flashing anyone. In fact, the only glaring no-shows were honorary chairs Ben Affleck and Jennifer Garner (who did, however, send video greetings).

The evening's funniest exchange: Taking the car keys from one guest, a parking valet said, "Are you one of our VIPs tonight?" to which the guest responded, "I'm a VIP every night."

Jenny Johnson emerging from the Children's Museum's climbing enclosure

Into Every Gala a Little Pain Must Fall...

Auspicious beginnings don't get any more auspicious than this: The Celebrity Series of Boston kicked off its season with a gala concert at Symphony Hall by diva extraordinaire Dame Kiri Te Kanawa, followed by drinks and dinner in the Higginson Room.

Present and accounted for: cochairs Caroline and Bob Collings and Paul and Liz Kastner, legendary impresario Walter Pierce, arts supporters Bert and Rosalie Cohen, new NEC president Tony Woodcock, party pair Peter Wender and Carl Karandjeff, the delightful Hsiu-Lan Chang and the lovely Jennifer Smartt.

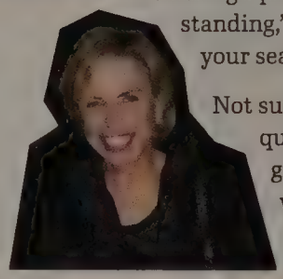
Erik Gronning, Alrie Sulka and Leslie Keno at the Ellis Memorial Antiques Show

Proving that boorish behavior can infiltrate even the most enchanted of evenings, however, one guest left his table as soon as was tastefully possible, marveling that the man next to him had managed to insult two close friends. "What an objectionable person," sniffed the offended gent.

Brahmins Can Be Catty, Too...

One of the most patrician of Boston social occasions—the gala preview party for the Ellis Memorial Antiques Show—upped the ante this year with caviar and superior bubbly, in addition to the traditional raw bar, at the Park Plaza Castle. Present and accounted for: statuesque brunette Julie Hume and the dapper Philip Gordon, Antiques Roadshow heartthrob Leslie Keno, real estate titan Mark Goldweitz, superphilanthropist Barbara Jordan, bedazzling socialite Debbie Lewis, the delightful Suki and Miguel de Braganca, the equally delightful Kay and Peter Lyons, and one guest who said, "I'd love to find a silver candle snuffer," to which a friend responded, "I have two. You can have one," prompting another to whisper, "Is her divorce final? She might have to give one back."



Embarrassment Has Its Uses...

You could barely move among all the movers and shakers who turned out at the State Room for the 25th-anniversary celebration of the Women's Lunch Place.

Event chairs Sarah and Peter Monaco engaged the likes of hedge fund titans Jim Palotta, with the lovely Kim, and Alex Zecca, with the gorgeous Laura, cardiologist to the stars Larry Cohn and his arts-patron wife, Roberta, power broker Ralph Martin, the improbably beautiful Jeannette Hsu-McSweeney and her husband, Todd, legal eagle Eleanor Cornish, party pair Mike and Betsy Danziger, blonde bombshell Holly McGrath and her other half, David Bruce, and emcee Susan Wornick of Channel 5, who used an unusual tactic to get the unruly crowd to quiet down and find their tables.

"Anyone who has had Botox or plastic surgery in the past two months, or any men currently holding a prescription for Viagra, please keep standing," she shouted. "Otherwise, take your seats."

Not surprisingly, everyone sat down quickly, and both dinner and the program soon got underway... although we doubt it would work on a room full of rowdy 5-year-olds. ✖✖✖

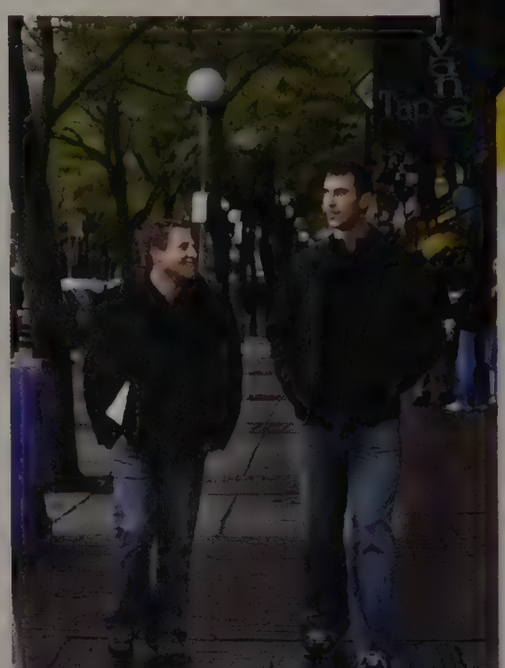
Slumming 'Round the Mountain

To air is human! Or so I airbrushed on my favorite T-shirt in high school. True story, although my husband encouraged me to keep it on the down-low. I scored the shirt on an annual trip to Breckenridge. Those were the days. My cool Colorado cousin, Michael, would teach me tricks like the Spread Eagle, and no slope seemed too scary.

Fast forward to 2007 and a weekend in Park City, Utah. I found myself more into the après-ski than the ski. Unlike my younger self, I know fear, and that means flying down a hill just isn't as amusing. If you can relate, check out our guide to having fun without leaving the lodge. For those of you who still love winter sports, we also break down the barriers between skiers and snowboarders this issue.



Bruins captain and cover boy Zdeno Chara decidedly doesn't have fear. View his most recent fight on YouTube to see what I mean. The mix of blood and ice only reinforces my inclination to stay inside, on terra firma, sipping a cocktail in front of the fireplace.

WE SKI KINGS

They should put their faces on T-shirts! In extreme sport circles, Steve and Todd Jones of Barnstable, Mass., are the equivalent of the Wachowski brothers (or maybe the Coens). As two of the founders of film producer Teton Gravity Research, they make 16-mm movies about people hurtling off the wrong sides of mountains on nothing more than Red Bull and a prayer. Says Steve, 38, "Being talent in other people's movies, and being young and idealistic, we thought we could do a better job of it than other filmmakers."

He adds, "When we started, youth culture set us apart. The music, the style of skiing. Now, it's production quality. POVs. Aerial angles." And, of course, horrific stunts. As Steve says, "We're keeping it edgy." ANDREW RIMAS

APPLEACHIA
Hamersley's Bistro spruces up a simple dessert.

Good Eats

An Apple Fritter a Day Considering that Gordon Hamersley took roast chicken and elevated it to a status typically reserved for unctuous toro and wagyu beef, we weren't surprised when he turned an equally humble staple into cloth-napkin cuisine. No relative of those doughnut shop versions, these two tart, craggy orbs arrive with a scoop of sparkly Calvados ice cream, a snowy dusting of sugar and a zigzag of caramely custard. And if they take a while to reach the table, it's only because they're fried to order and served warm—the way all manner of doughnut should be. ELIZABETH BOMZE

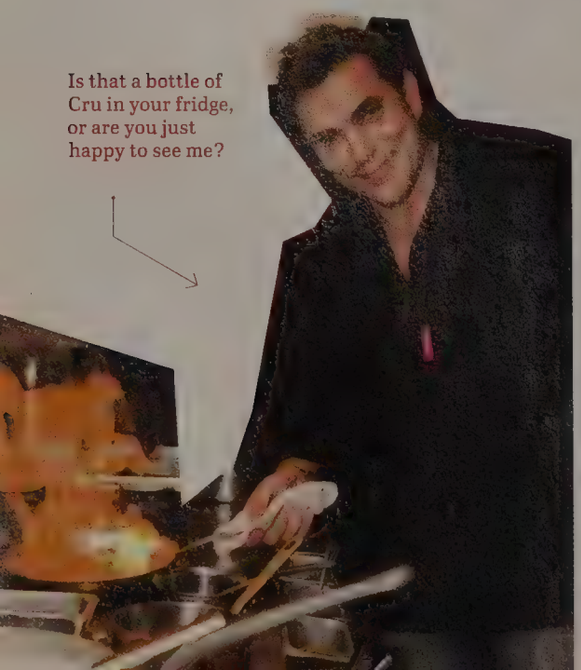
Pop Quiz
Eat the whole thing, and we'll put your picture in the magazine.

You get about 500 pounds of beef from your average cow. Bostonians looking for their cut go to the corner of Tremont and Beacon, where three new purveyors of meat and marrow mark the map like a bloody arrow. Whether it comes with a bag of chips or truffled fries, the Carving Station, KO Prime and Mooo are slinging a lot of steak. But how much approximately?

A) 15 cows a month
B) 20 cows a month
C) 30 cows a month



Answer: B

Drink of the Moment

Big Ticket Item

This cocktail will definitely make it past the first round.

If I were going to create a drink named after Kevin Garnett, it'd be blood, sweat and Everclear garnished with a gym sock—or at least something green. At Excelsior, the Kevin's Garnet—part of the "Jewel Martinis" line—is sandwiched on the menu between drinks like the Pearl-Fection and the Pear-a-dot. A blend of Stoli Ohranj, Chambord, triple sec and blood orange puree with a champagne topper, this sweet, bubbly drink doesn't have KG's trademark intensity, but there's an acidic bite to the finish that the Kid can be proud of. The cocktail is the brainchild of GM Peter Baker, a prime-timer when it comes to pairings. "We look at how quaffable our drinks are and what they'll complement," Baker says. "Our duck dish has the Asian flare and spice, and this will knock it down." NICK ALTSCHULLER

Is that a bottle of Cru in your fridge, or are you just happy to see me?

Question for Todd English
Four must-haves in your fridge?

"I'm a big mustard junky, so I'm always trying out different ones. They usually last pretty long in there."

"Of course, I'll have a couple bottles of champagne, usually Cru, and another couple bottles of white wine."

"I'm a big cheese guy, too, and there's going to be at least a big wedge of Parmigiano-Reggiano."

"I'm really into juices and have been on a pomegranate kick for a little while now. There's always some chocolate soy milk in there, too."

Purveyors

No Lame Duck So long as you're not a vegetarian, the window treatments at Vinh Sun BBQ & Restaurant are eye-catching, if not utterly mouthwatering. Like many other Chinatown joints, this one lures clientele by dangling roasted meats—slabs of crimson-burnished char siu, salty baked chicken and, most notably, bronzed whole ducks—in the storefront, and then butchering them to order. You'll see plenty of fowl-hounds gnawing away on hunks of duck—maybe doused with a shot of palate-piquing red vinegar—but we most enjoy the house specialty when it crowns a steaming bowl of wonton noodle soup.

NOT TO BE MYTHED

The long-awaited Persephone sees daylight.

WITH A DEGREE IN PSYCHOLOGY and more than a decade of experience running his own successful restaurant, Lumière's Michael Leviton easily persuaded the owners of a forthcoming Fort Point Channel restaurant/retail complex to change the name from Achilles to Persephone.

"I thought it was imperative," says Leviton, who's been brought on board by the Achilles Project to conceptualize, develop and play a major role in running the eatery that complements the Achilles boutique.

Owners Michael Krupp and Shaka Ramsay "don't know anything about restaurants," says Leviton, "but what they're doing with the clothes is what we're doing with the food." He cites a shared "fundamental aesthetic… high-quality materials, technique and presentation."

Leviton has hired key staff—including chef de cuisine Jeff Pond, most recently of Tomasso Trattoria in Southboro—and written the menu in time for a planned mid-December opening.

"I will not be the guy who gets the restaurant up and running" and then cashes out, he says. "I have a long-term contract, and I'll be splitting my time between [Persephone and Lumière]."

Meanwhile, expect Persephone's menu to include favorites from Lumière—wild mushroom soup, steak tartare with red curry vinaigrette and kaffir lime leaf oil—as well as plates listed as "small, medium, large and extra large" (for two, such as whole roasted black sea bass).

ACHILLES DEAL Lumière's Michael Leviton helped develop Fort Point's Persephone.

WHOA, WHOA, WHOA, WHOA! Emotionally bankrupt? Excuse me? After two years of attempting to meet every emotional need you've got, I have every right to be bankrupt. You are a one-woman run on the First Bank of Emo. And forgive me, at what point in the last two years did I say that I was going to give up my relationships with the other 6 billion people on the planet and devote myself to the worship of you? While breaking up by phone isn't going to win me any awards, it was the safest way to go. I've seen Fatal Attraction, and I know how those conversations end...

THANKSGIVING? It's a great day to spend with the family and eat, and you can't help but love it for that. So big thanks go out to the Pilgrims and the Indians for sharing their harvest millions of years ago, as their generosity has stood the test of time. But let me ask you this: Do Pilgrims stop by your house each Thanksgiving to leave gifts? I didn't think so! Thanksgiving is just the preparation day, with the day after becoming more important in recent years due to its relation to the REAL holiday season!

ASK THE EXPERT

Q: HOW DO YOU TELL A FUNNY STORY?

JEFF GARLIN COMEDIAN

Well, here's what I know. The best way to judge how successful you are is by how much the audience is able to take away from your story, and the only way to do that is to bring something new and original to the table

Obviously, that's a little easier said than done. I've found that anyone who's trying to bring something truly original to the table is going to bomb a whole lot when they first get started. But after a while you can really begin to find your voice and things will start to come together.

Garlin performs Dec. 14 and 15 at the Comedy Connection in Faneuil Hall.

Dating

Crazy Like a Fox

At first, the idea of CrazyBlindDate.com sounds as fun as KookyRectalExam.net. But it may actually be the least awkward way to meet a mate.

"It's setup with an out," says cofounder Sam Yagan, who previously created OK Cupid and SparkNotes with two Harvard classmates. "All you've committed to is 20 minutes and a beer. If she's the antithesis of what you want in a girl, at least it was interesting."

Launched this fall in Boston, New York, Austin and San Francisco, CrazyBlindDate allows you to be your own Yenta. Just provide a brief profile of yourself and who you'd like to meet, then pick a neighborhood and time range for the rendezvous. The service sifts through possible matches and texts you with an option. If both sides agree, you've scored a free date completely devoid of please-don't-let-me-die-alone pressure.

Whether you're an extrovert who needs an outlet or an introvert in need of a kick in the pants, this site could be crazy enough to work.

SHE'S GOT LEGS

Some women slip on their boots at the first sign of fall. We prefer to take our time transitioning from our beloved (OK, bedraggled) flip-flops to a shoe of more stature. After weeks of scouring the shops, we settled on looks that are practical and polished. Barneys brings us a pair in purple; designer Tory Burch embellishes sleek black suede with signature gold details; a slouchy style by Steve Madden is reminiscent of the '80s; Bally goes glam with fur-trimmed heels; Uggs get even cozier in crochet; and Crocs turn chic. MARNI ELYSE KATZ

This isn't your childhood flying saucer. Bust out your best moves on the kneel-on-top Killer B Sled ($99). Here's how it works: Nest your knees into the cushy foam lining and lash the padded strap across your thighs. Then launch. Using your arms and hips to maneuver, accelerate to escape velocity. Beauty

Ice Queens With winter sports come scaly skin and crackly lips. Meghan Quinn and Sue Hale of Boston University's Snowboarding Team offer tips for staying smooth on the slopes. They swear by Burt's Bees Beeswax Lip Balm ($2.99) with vitamin E and peppermint oil for its ultra-moisturizing effect. To combat exposure caused by constantly removing their gloves to tighten boots and adjust bindings, these snow bunnies slather on Neutrogena Norwegian Formula Hand Cream ($5.99). As for keeping faces wrinkle-free, they say, cover up. "We may look like boys on the slopes with our faces totally concealed," Quinn says, "but we care more about our appearance in the lodge and at after-parties." MARNI ELYSE KATZ

Expedia offers flight and hotel packages to the Fairmont Chateau Whistler (Jan. 2-7: $3,699 for two adults traveling from Boston), a resort at the foot of Blackcolm Mountain. The chateau features 8,100 acres of snow, more than 200 trails and a slew of seasonal sports including dog sledding, snowshoeing and snowmobiling. Roots outerwear not necessary. AMANDA KNORR orfection has its price.

Of course it tastes better than other beers. We've had over 600 years to get the recipe right. Our esteemed brewery has been producing beer in Leuven since 1366. Which means we've been around a bit longer than most. Mind you, over the years our beer has witnessed the odd change or two. For instance, our customers no longer drink it to ward off the Plague, as they used to in medieval times. However, one thing has stayed the same after all these years. Stella Artois is still painstakingly brewed in a time-honored tradition with the choicest ingredients. Which is why our customers have kept coming back for more, even after 600 years.

Always enjoy responsibly. www.stellaartois.com

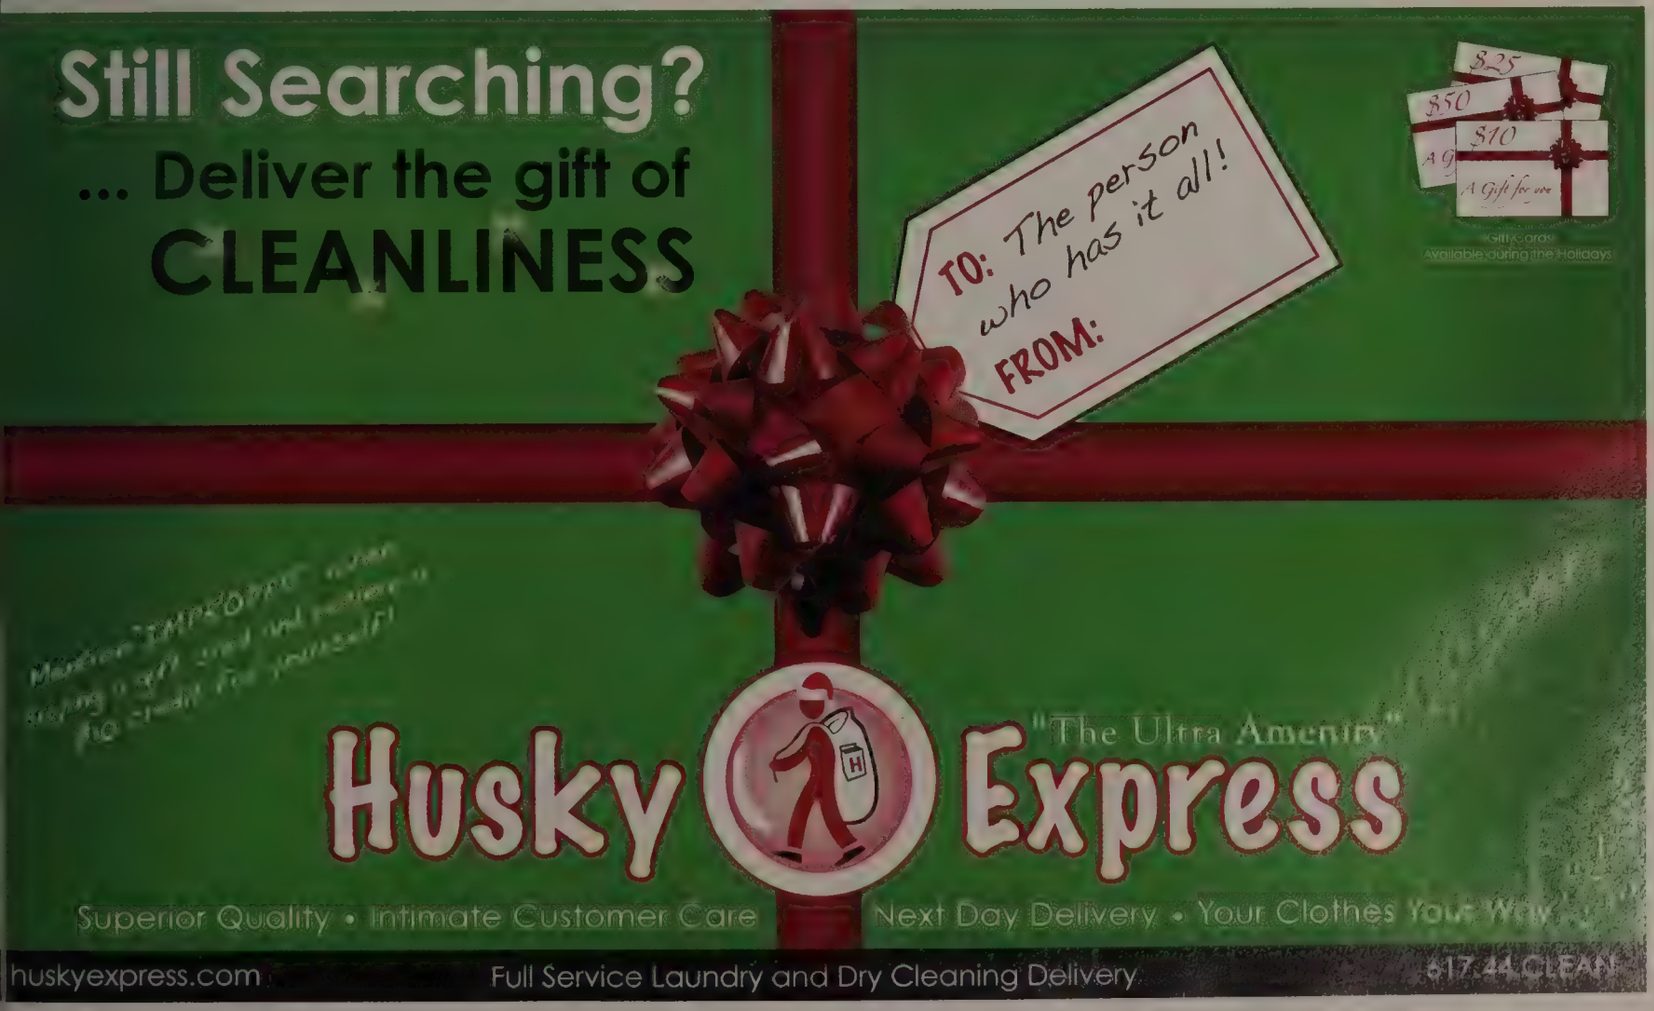
JOHNNIE ON THE SPOT

People usually think of the West End as a dim clutter of streets in the shadow of the TD Banknorth Garden. Its restaurants err towards the deep-fried and the plasma-screened, and there's hardly a leather banquette to be seen. But no longer. Johnnie's on the Side, opening Dec. 10, is two floors of expensive chic leavened with a raft of sports and celebrity memorabilia.



"We're not a sports bar," says owner John Caron, who collected the swag during nearly 20 years working for the Red Sox' front office. "We're upscale, casual yet sophisticated." Indeed, despite decorative touches like a set of 1928 Boston Garden seats and a life-sized portrait of Bobby Orr, Johnnie's isn't a sports bar. Designed by Dave O, who developed the fashionable Beehive and Pho Republique in the South End, the upstairs dining room is lush with mahogany and leather, while a private salon in the back mimics Jackie Kennedy's Red Room in the White House, down to the gold drapes. Downstairs, "the West End Lounge" is a casual loft-style hangout with live music.

"We want to be in with the neighborhood," says Caron. The venue wears its geography on its sleeve with a menu inspired by the West End's ethnic jumble: pan-roasted kosher chicken with lemon, garlic, herbs and mashed potatoes ($15); St. Louis ribs with collard greens and black-eyed peas ($15); baked shrimp and grits ($11). "Even our wine list reflects the neighborhood," says Caron, citing vintages from Portugal, Italy and Israel. But the biggest sell is nostalgia—you can actually hang your coat in a Fenway locker where Ted Williams used to drape his uniform. Old Boston meets modern luxury makes Johnnie's cool central.

ANDREW RIMAS

"We've gone for a nostalgic look. We want people to feel they're returning to the old West End."
—John Caron, owner

SPIRITED IDEAS

French Kiss of Style

Celebrating their 40th anniversary, Pierre Deux has French country down. Their signature take on toile, with its classical colorful coziness and cheer, is instantly recognizable. The Provençal palette is flowery, green, yellow and sunset-red. Naturally you want this fabric on a plump little sofa or club chair with settee, because Voltaire's stopping by and he needs to put his feet up. You can buy fabric by the bolt; get a whole bolt, get a discount. That need can be indulged in many ways: crinkly little lampshades or smooth ones highlighting the material as it lights the room, on wallpaper and on capacious, colorful bags that generously hold everything. Substantial desks, bureaus and armoires exude the Provençal flavor in warm woods. One gorgeous round table has an embedded Lazy Susan surrounded by cherry wood and marquetry inserts; circular leaves enlarge it to 87 inches. Their famous Quimper earthenware adorned with childlike knights and peasants brings on French country even in little dishes. Books and diaries exude the stylistic parfum of a naughty tante.

Chance of a Ghost

MIT professor Alan Lightman, balancing on the pontoons of fiction-writing and fact, straddles the verities of spirituality and science in his novel Ghost. David, a bit of a low achiever, finds work in a place portrayed as rather peaceful: a mortuary. There in the soothingly named "slumber room," he has a vision, possibly of a ghost. Word gets around, and soon people at the Society for the Second World—believers? scientists? nutters?—perform an experiment hoping to prove that David's psychic abilities can influence a random-number generator. Apart from possible cosmic implications, his mysterious brush with the supernatural produces exciting little whifflings in his own unexciting life—his ex-wife makes a wary return, and he's deemed suddenly sexy by another woman. He becomes, willy-nilly, a celebrity. Lightman (with that name he could never be heavy-handed) artfully creates slightly comic believers and meatier-minded skeptics. And in conjunction with his sweet, philosophical mortician/boss Martin, he places "Who, me?" David half-dazed in the middle. Ghost by Alan Lightman.

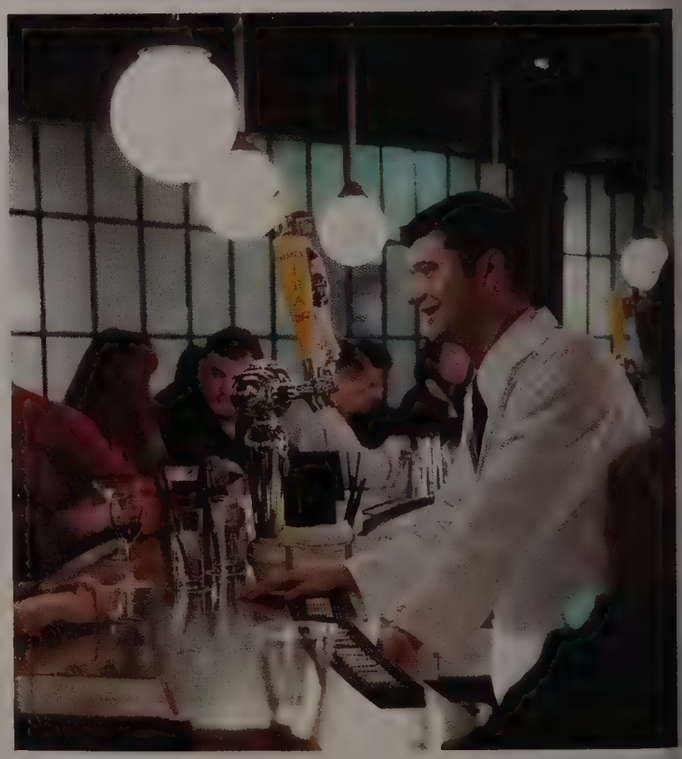
WALKING THROUGH the door at Gaslight, you feel magically transported to the Boulevard Saint Germain in Paris. The bar, located just past the entrance, comprises a solid 35-foot sheet of zinc bearing the stamp of its French manufacturer, Atelier Nectou. It reportedly took 40 men to carry it into this converted warehouse. Now that's attention to detail.



Inside the dining room, white café curtains hang from brass fixtures. Gleaming mirrors, ceiling fans, Art Deco table lamps, large hanging globes and a phalanx of wine buckets further channel the traditional brasserie.

Gaslight's menu remains equally faithful (I brought along the owner of French importer-wholesaler Terroir Wines, among others, as my authenticity barometer), right down to the inset boxes and sidebars announcing the coquillage (shellfish) and the weekly cycle of plats de jour. It also offers a good range of vin. Over three visits I enjoyed half-liter carafes of a dry chardonnay called Ja Ja ($13.50); a full-bodied cabernet sauvignon Baron de Rothschild ($17.50); Lily Pad, an authentic Burgundian pinot noir ($23.50); a merlot called Le Faux Frog ($19.50), with good acidity, rich fruit and some tannic backbone; and Chateau de Pizay ($19.50), a fruity gamay from Beaujolais, your classic bistro quaff.

Starting at the top of the menu, we ordered a dozen Island Creek oysters from Duxbury ($24). Accompanied by a shallot-studded vinaigrette and a red cocktail sauce, these pristine creatures came unadorned in their pleasantly briny liquid. An order of pâté ($7.50) was a slice of two different terrines, one a coarse pâté de campagne, the other smoother and milder, both moist and delicious, served alongside a rich, fat Lyonnaise-style sausage. Six escargots ($8.50) arrived in a small cast-iron broiling pan, sans shells with twice their weight in butter and garlic—the traditional Burgundian fashion.

One of Gaslight's most enjoyable appetizers, steak tartare ($8.50), consisted of a puck-sized cylinder of lean, raw beef topped with a layer of duxelles (minced, sautéed mushrooms) and a poached egg. Finally, an appetizer of asparagus vinaigrette ($7.50) suffered from being out of season, but the kitchen made the best of what it had with a garnish of mildly salty white anchovies.

Of Gaslight's plats de jour, we sampled the coq au vin à l'ancienne ($19) on Wednesday and the cassoulet Toulousian ($18.75) on a Sunday. The coq au vin—chicken braised in red wine with bacon, mushrooms and pearl onions—lived up to the classic. The cassoulet proved weaker, with mushy beans, blasé sauce, dry sausage and indifferent duck. Rotisserie leg of lamb ($18.75) also fell short, ranging from juicy and tender to dry, but the dish was rescued by its garnish of pommes morbier, potatoes layered with robust cheese. Choucroute garni ($17.25) brought mellow, smoky sauerkraut with tender duck confit, a frankfurter, a garlic sausage and braised apples. While I seldom complain about portions, I could have used more sauerkraut. Cabbage is the dish's raison d'être.

Three other main courses I tried all approached perfection. The rotisserie chicken ($16.50) was crisp, its flesh succulent and tender, accompanied by french fries flecked with herbs. Sautéed skate ($18.75) brought firm, boned fish in a stunning caper beurre noisette—buttery and delicious. The poêlée espagnol ($19.50), a thick filet of roast cod, came garnished with shellfish (predominantly mussels), chorizo, small al dente cubes of zucchini and sauce l'armoricaine. Finally, mussels and frites ($14.25) included clean, sweet mussels in a broth enlivened with coriander and Pernod. I was even more impressed by the frites, of which we devoured every last one.

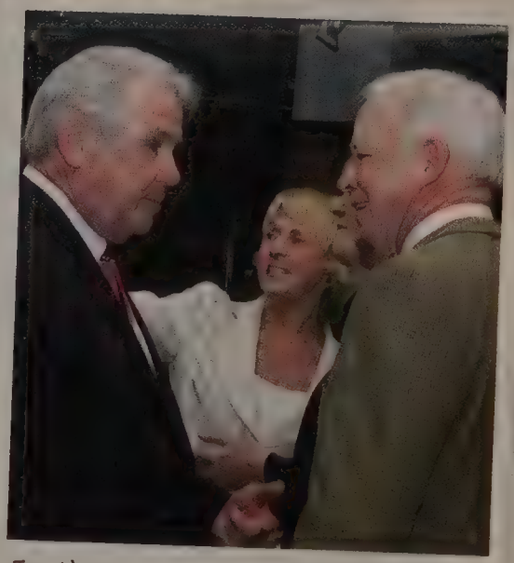
Tart au citron



Nor did desserts disappoint, all value-priced at $6.75. The Far Breton, a custard tart, had tender, buttery pastry and a rich Armagnac-prune compote. The tart au citron, France's answer to key lime pie, boasted a marvelous filling and the same excellent crust, with a garnish of fresh raspberries and whipped cream. The less successful tart tatin struck me as a deconstructed candied apple.

Gaslight will satisfy devotees of French cuisine—and thankfully its authenticity went only so far. In lieu of the jaded, grumpy servers typical of French brasseries, the waitstaff treated us with a warmth and an enthusiasm that made dining here une joie. ★★★

FAT CHANCE

We need a new weapon in the war on obesity: shame.

I WAS WATCHING 60 Minutes the other night, and Lesley Stahl was doing a piece on how New York City is trying to force fast food restaurants to supply detailed calorie information on their menu boards. The underlying premise seemed to be that these restaurants are trying to trick you into getting fat, and the only way to fight their evil agenda is through information. At Subway, which lists calorie counts for six-inch subs on their menu board, Stahl ordered a sandwich and then complained that, because it was a foot-long, she had to figure out the total damage in her head. Then she ordered mayo on it, while whining that they don't tell you what that does to the calorie count. The Subway exec standing next to her calmly explained that they can't list every permutation of every sandwich on the menu board. Thankfully, I don't work for Subway, because I would've hit her over the head with a stale Italian ciabatta while screaming, "It's mayonnaise! It's pure fat! What the f do you think it does to the calorie count?!"

I've had it with the whole victim mentality regarding fast food. This menu board nonsense is just the latest example of a growing notion that it's someone else's responsibility to save us from ourselves. Fast food joints aren't like the cigarette companies in the '50s; KFC isn't running ads with doctors eating buckets of chicken and espousing the health benefits of deep-fried poultry. Burger King isn't suggesting that chicken fries are part of a nutritious breakfast. We don't need more information. What we need is more shame.

Personally, I have a highly developed sense of shame and inadequacy, and that's what helps keep me in shape. I still vividly remember the day in high school when my girlfriend pointed out, "Your brother is more built than you." My brother was in eighth grade at the time, and this offhand (yet, in retrospect, incredibly bitchy) observation sent me into an insecurity-driven exercise routine that's still going. I don't exercise because I think it's exhilarating or fun; I exercise because otherwise I'd have crippling self-esteem issues.

And that's where 60 Minutes went wrong in its menu-board calorie-count advocacy. Calories are abstract. Sure, if you're counting calories, it may be useful to know exactly how many you're taking in, but if you're counting calories you shouldn't be walking through the door at Burger King anyway. Worrying about calories in a Wendy's is like worrying about STDs in a Bangkok brothel. A calorie is a sanitized unit of guilt, a way to quantify how bad you should feel about any given binge without truly internalizing the consequences. A calorie is just a number. Shame, on the other hand, is visceral.

Worrying about calories in a Wendy's is like worrying about STDs in a Bangkok brothel.

Massachusetts used to be on the cutting edge of shame-driven behavior modification. Scarlet letters, stocks on the Common—whatever the offense, the Puritans had awesome shame-based punishment. Back in the day, if you ate too much at dinner, they'd make you take your shirt off and do the Truffle Shuffle in Faneuil Hall while all the other Pilgrims chanted, "Fatty, fatty, chicken bucket, ye weigh more than all the whales in Nantucket!" This is historical fact. Look it up.

Today, we've got Tyra Banks appearing on her talk show in a bikini and telling everyone that it's righteous to be large and in charge (ironic, since she just kicked a girl off America's Next Top Model for being too heavy). Mister Rogers taught us that people should like you just the way you are. And 60 Minutes is implying that if McDonald's doesn't print caloric information on each ketchup packet, then it's their fault that you turned into a parade float from eating Big Macs every day.

Here are a few ideas that make more sense than New York's menu board proposal: How about, instead of calorie counts, we just show photos of big fat guts next to each sandwich? Maybe we could have a surgeon general's warning printed on the counter, something like, "The surgeon general has determined that fast food is disgusting and you should only eat it once in a while." Or—better yet—require fast food chains to hire only fit and attractive people. Because if I could stand to lose a few pounds, I sure don't want to order a Triple Stacker from a hottie.

Or maybe we could start a hotline where my high school girlfriend berates you to the point of developing enough of an inferiority complex to hit the gym. On that note, I've got to find her number and get a fresh dose of motivation. I've been drinking a lot of beer lately and for some reason I'm developing quite a gut. Somebody call 60 Minutes, because I think I've been tricked. ✖✖✖

THE PERK, MVPS, SANTANA SWEEPSTAKES & GINO

3 Random Thoughts

1. Not So Rosie: Obviously injuries happen during an NFL season, and it was only a matter of time before a big one hit the Patriots, but that doesn't make us any less depressed about losing Rosevelt Colvin for the year.

2. Double the Fun: With the NFL MVP destined for Tom Brady or Randy Moss, and Garnett emerging as the early favorite in the NBA, Boston has the chance to have two MVPs for the first time since 1986. Back then, Larry Bird won it for the Celtics and Roger Clemens for the Sox—before trading the trophy for a beer and five pounds of chicken wings during an eating binge in the winter of '93.

3. The U: If you lived in Boston during the early '90s, you've got a soft spot in your heart for UMass hoops, and it looks like the Minutemen are on the verge of breaking back into the spotlight. After just missing the Big Dance last year, they've started this season on a rampage and already signed the best point guard in New England for 2008. Somewhere out there, Dana Dingle is smiling.

5 REASONS TO LOVE THE CELTICS

Gino Time
Some say Gino is the greatest figure in the history of sports entertainment. We beg to differ. He's the greatest figure in the history of Earth. If you're not familiar, Gino's a tight-shirt-wearing, sock-down-the-pants-stuffing hurricane with only two loves in this world: the Celtics and dancing like nobody's watching. He only appears when the C's are up big, but when he does...

Mike Gorman
Jerry Remy gets most of the broadcaster love in this city, but there's really no better TV guy in Boston than Gorman. He cares about the team more than just about anyone, yet never sounds like a homer. Plus, we need him there to wake Tommy up after time-outs.

KG's Intensity
It's come to the point where we're legitimately afraid of Kevin Garnett. It's not just that he's intense during the games; it's that that crazed, determined look hasn't left his face once since opening night. We bet KG even folds laundry like it's Game 7, and high fives every one of his socks when he's done.

U-N-I-T-Y
Have 13 guys ever collectively liked each other more than the Celtics? It'd be hilarious if Comcast launched a series of commercials that brings the C's chemistry into real-world situations. In one scene, a delivery guy trips over some boxes only to have three C's sprint over to help him up; in another, James Posey stands outside the Pru giving out hugs to people as they head to work.

The Perk
From here on out, any scowl or mean expression will be known simply as the Perk, in honor of Kendrick Perkins, the man with only one emotion on the court: pissed off. It doesn't matter whether he's fouled out of the game or just hit a big shot, it's the same face, and it's says, "Step off, I'm doing the Perk."

TWO HOT OFF-SEASON THREADS

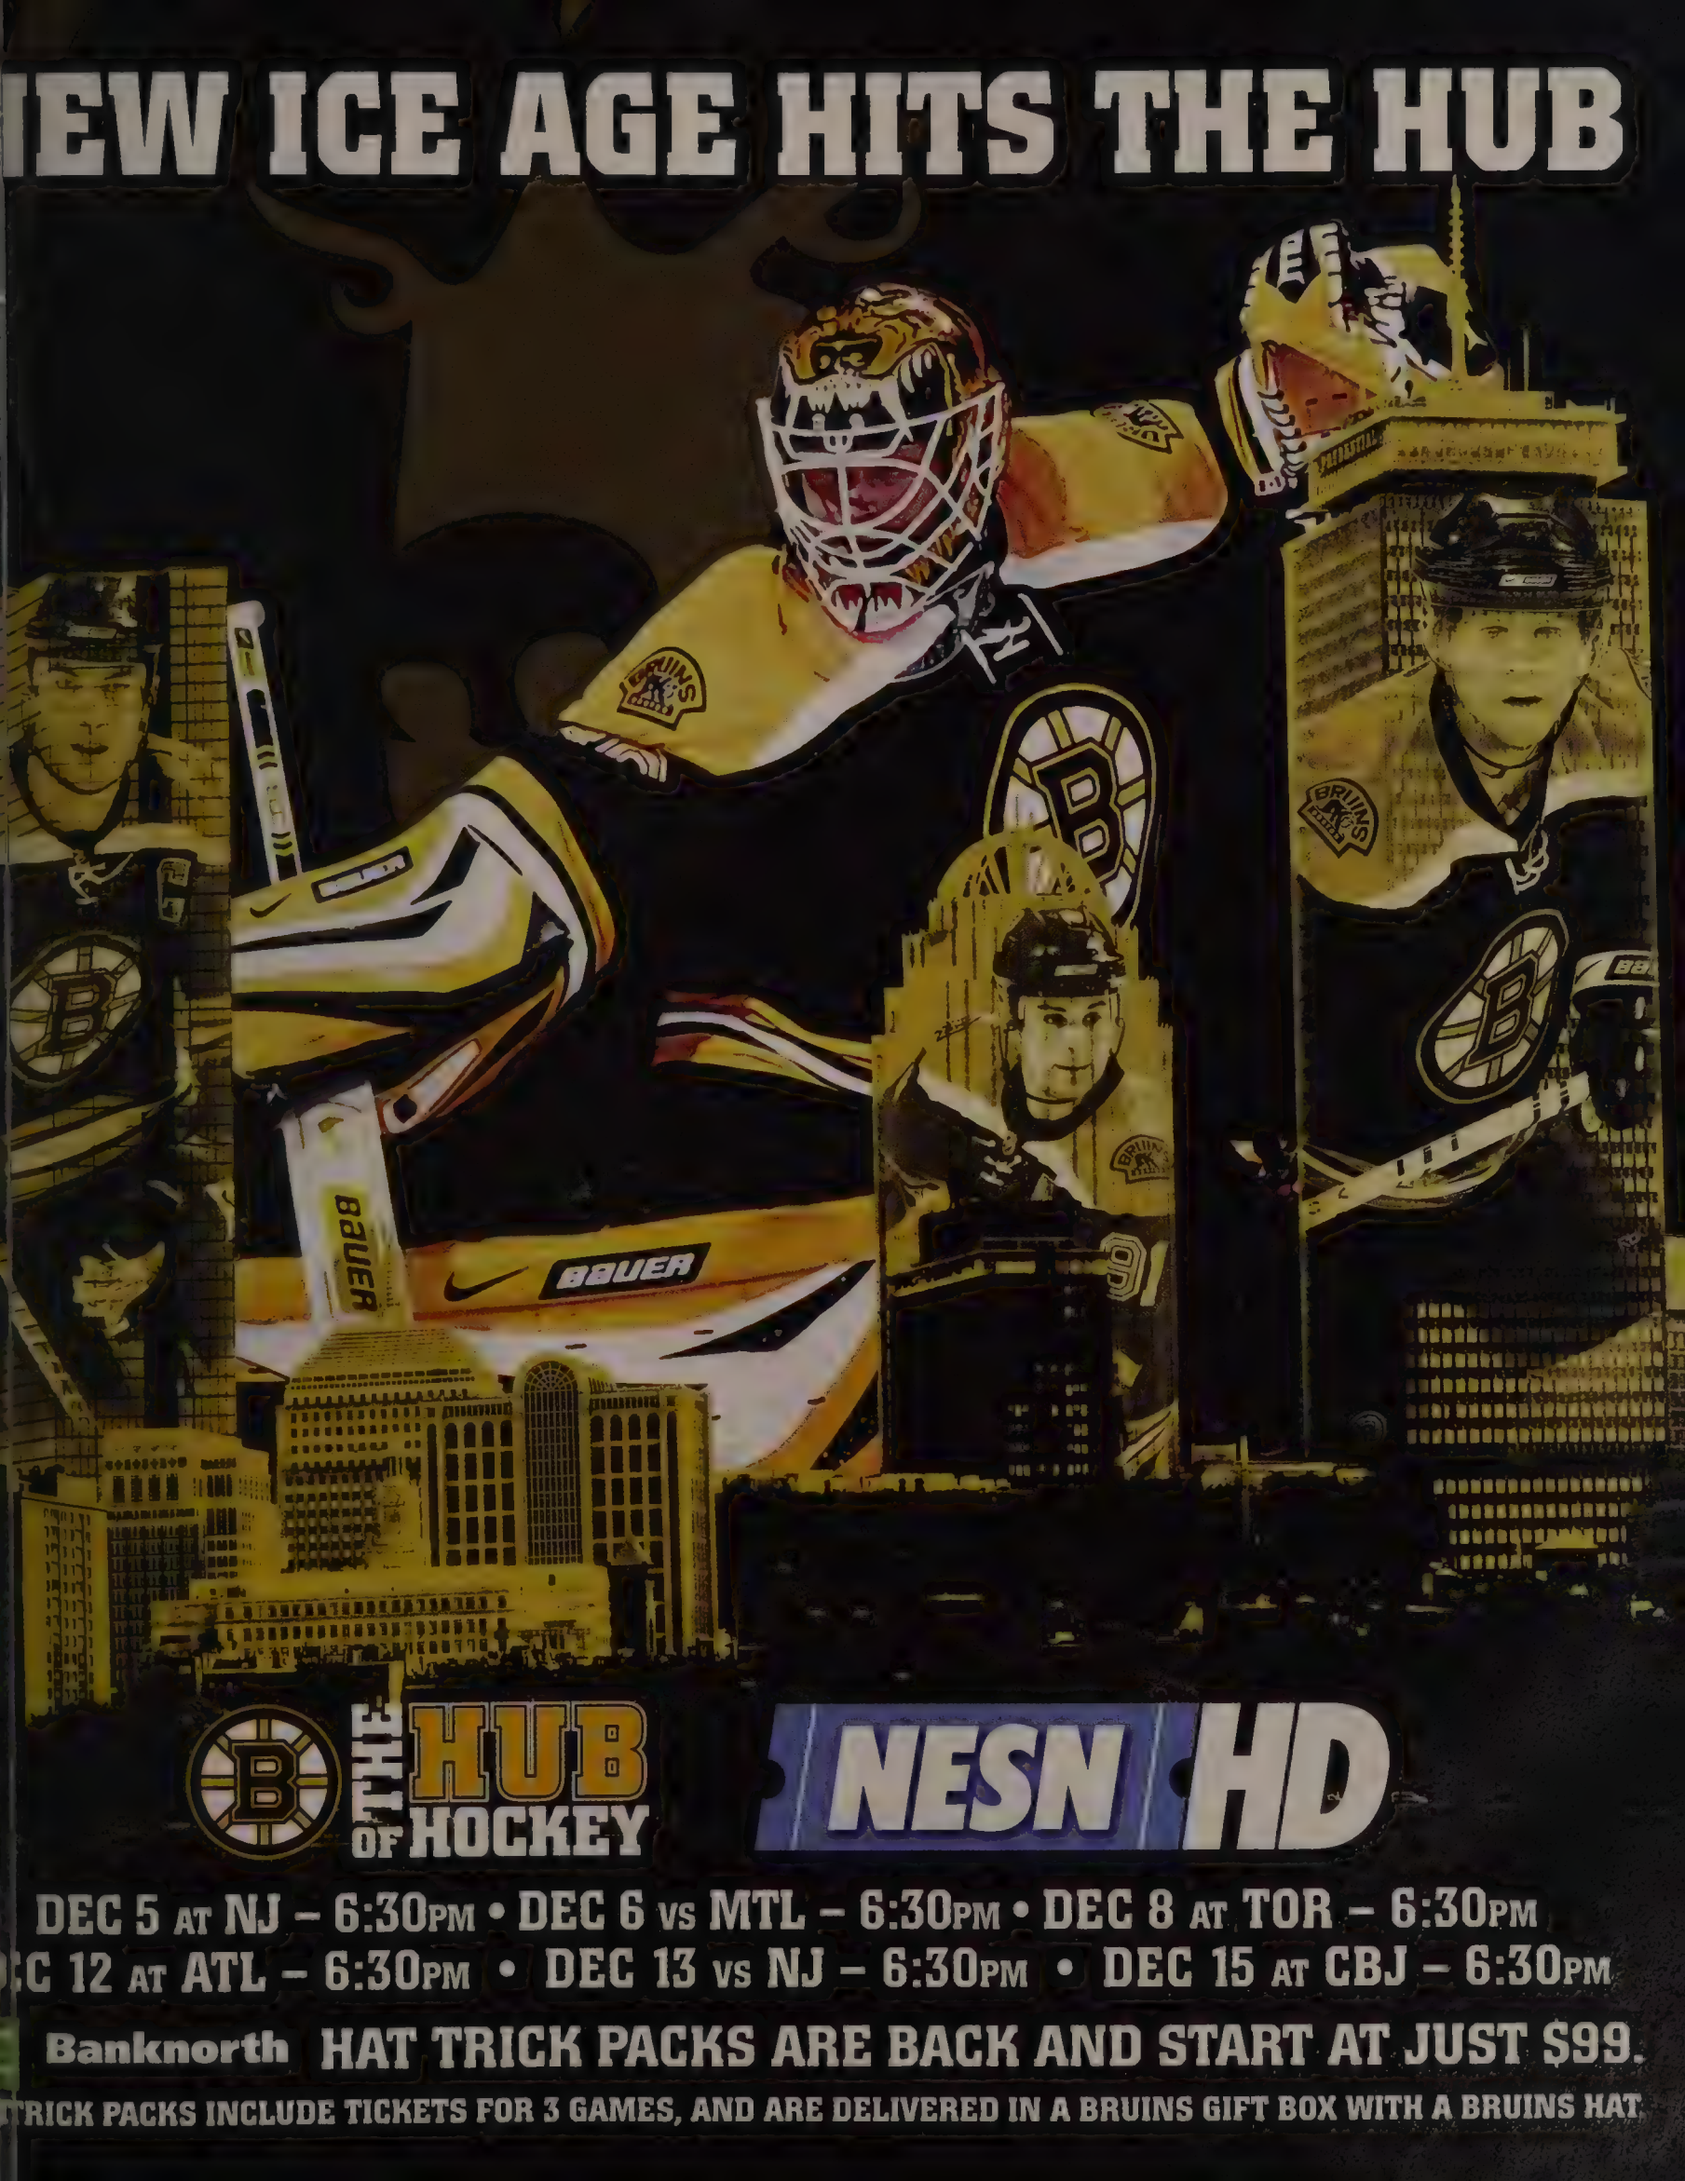
1. The Jewel Santana: Jacoby Ellsbury is going to be a great major league centerfielder, and we'd love for him to stay in Boston. But if the Twins offered to take him and another couple prospects for Johan Santana, we'd do it in a second. It's easy to get caught up in the hype surrounding local blue-chippers (we once argued against trading Trot Nixon for a pre-meltdown Sammy Sosa), but you don't pass on a 28-year-old, two-time Cy Young winner for a 24-year-old, 185-pound outfielder with 35 career at-bats.

2. Um... That's it: Seriously, has there been a less dramatic and controversial off-season in Red Sox history? Here we are in early December, and the only real question on the roster is the No. 5 starter.

PIECE OF SOBERING NEWS

Did you know Randy Moss is the exact same height and weight (6-4, 210 pounds) as Jason Kidd? How is that right? When we watch Moss on the field, it feels like he's Manute Bol in cleats, a superhuman specimen for whom the laws of physics don't apply, not a guy who's roughly the same size as an NBA point guard. It doesn't feel right. In fact, let's forget we ever had this conversation.

4 DATES TO WATCH



12/6 The MLB winter meetings officially close in Nashville, Tenn. The big story will be whether or not Johan Santana is still on the Minnesota Twins. The tiny story will be the size of Barry Bonds' testicles.

12/9 Steelers at Patriots. After the Colts game, everyone looked to Pittsburgh as the biggest threat to the Patriots' undefeated season. Then the Steelers lost to the Jets and barely beat the Dolphins in back-to-back weeks, so... yup, probably still going to be undefeated.

12/12 Ron Artest and the Sacramento Kings are in town to take on the Celtics. Artest, of course, is best known for his role in one of the ugliest and most disturbing moments in NBA history: the 2006 release of his rap album, My World.

12/16 The Pats (at home against the hated Jets) and the Celtics (on the road against the Canadian Raptors) both suit up for 1 pm games today. So here's the question: Who's going to score more points? Considering the C's only average about 100 a game, we're going with the Pats.

rebecca fields

Soroff On REBECCA FIELD

With a nontraditional body type (for L.A.), there's just more of her to love.

UP-AND-COMING actress Rebecca Field was born and raised in the Berkshires. After moving to Los Angeles to pursue an acting career, she landed small roles on such shows as Monk, ER, Mind of Mencia and the Jamie Kennedy Experiment. More memorably, she played the cop's wife in the videos for R. Kelly's Trapped in the Closet song cycle. After originating the role of Janet "The Planet" Meadows last season, she was recently named a series regular on October Road, the ABC drama set in a fictional Massachusetts town called Knights Ridge, and last month she served as the honorary chair of the Multi-Service Eating Disorders Association's annual gala.

Jonathan Soroff: First of all, any relation to Mrs. Fields of cookie fame?
Rebecca Field: [Laughs.] I wish! I'd like that recipe.

I know. I think she puts crack in the cookies.
I do too. Anything with chocolate has some sort of crack component. Chocolate's my downfall.

How personal is the issue of eating disorders to you?
I've always struggled with weight. I've finally come to the point where I feel good about myself regardless of my size or how much I weigh, and I think the more comfortable you are with yourself, the less likely you are to [face] a problem like that. I would never promote being overweight and unhealthy—I try to eat well and exercise, but other than that, I've accepted that I'm going to be whatever size I am. With the story line on October Road, I play this girl, Janet, who's very insecure about her body and has never been in a relationship. She thinks [it's] because of her weight, so it was sort of art imitating life. October Road is one of the shows that's changing the way people look on TV, and the regular girls can relate to Janet.

How much anorexia do you see in Hollywood?
Someone asked me that yesterday, and I couldn't say for sure, because I'm not a clinician diagnosing people, but the weight stuff around here is pretty severe. It's crazy. People are really small.

Is it hard being an actress who falls outside the traditional look?
It's amazing for me. Being that I'm not traditional means that I stand out from the crowd. It was hard when I first moved here because you can't help but have insecurities when you see all these gorgeous, well-put-together, very skinny women who make you go, "Wow. She's perfect." Of course, there's no such thing as perfect, and everybody has their own set of insecurities and problems.

> "It's not much of a secret, but Drew Barrymore is my absolute favorite. I think I'd pass out if I met her."

Do you feel you get typecast?
Yeah. When I first got out here and started getting my first jobs, I was always the gun-toting, Walmart-shopping white trash girl. It was hilarious. I played a white trash girl on the Jamie Kennedy Experiment in a Jerry Springer spoof, and R. Kelly used me in his video for Trapped in the Closet as the white trash wife of the cop.

How did you hook up with R. Kelly of all people?
I love R. Kelly. He's so geniusly crazy and amazing. Back then I was just busting my hump trying to get a job, and I'd check a casting notice every day. The description just said, "Music video," not whose it was. I sent my stuff over, they called me in and I got it. It's gotten a lot of attention. You know when SNL and Jimmy Kimmel are doing parodies of something, it's big.

Any advice or words of wisdom for girls who don't fit the Barbie doll stereotype?
Patience. It takes a long time. Embrace who you are. If everyone was the same, how frickin' boring would the world be?

Your hair is gorgeous. What's your secret?
Thanks, dude! Um, I guess haircuts every six months. That, and the lady who does hair and makeup. If you saw me on the street you probably wouldn't think it's so pretty.

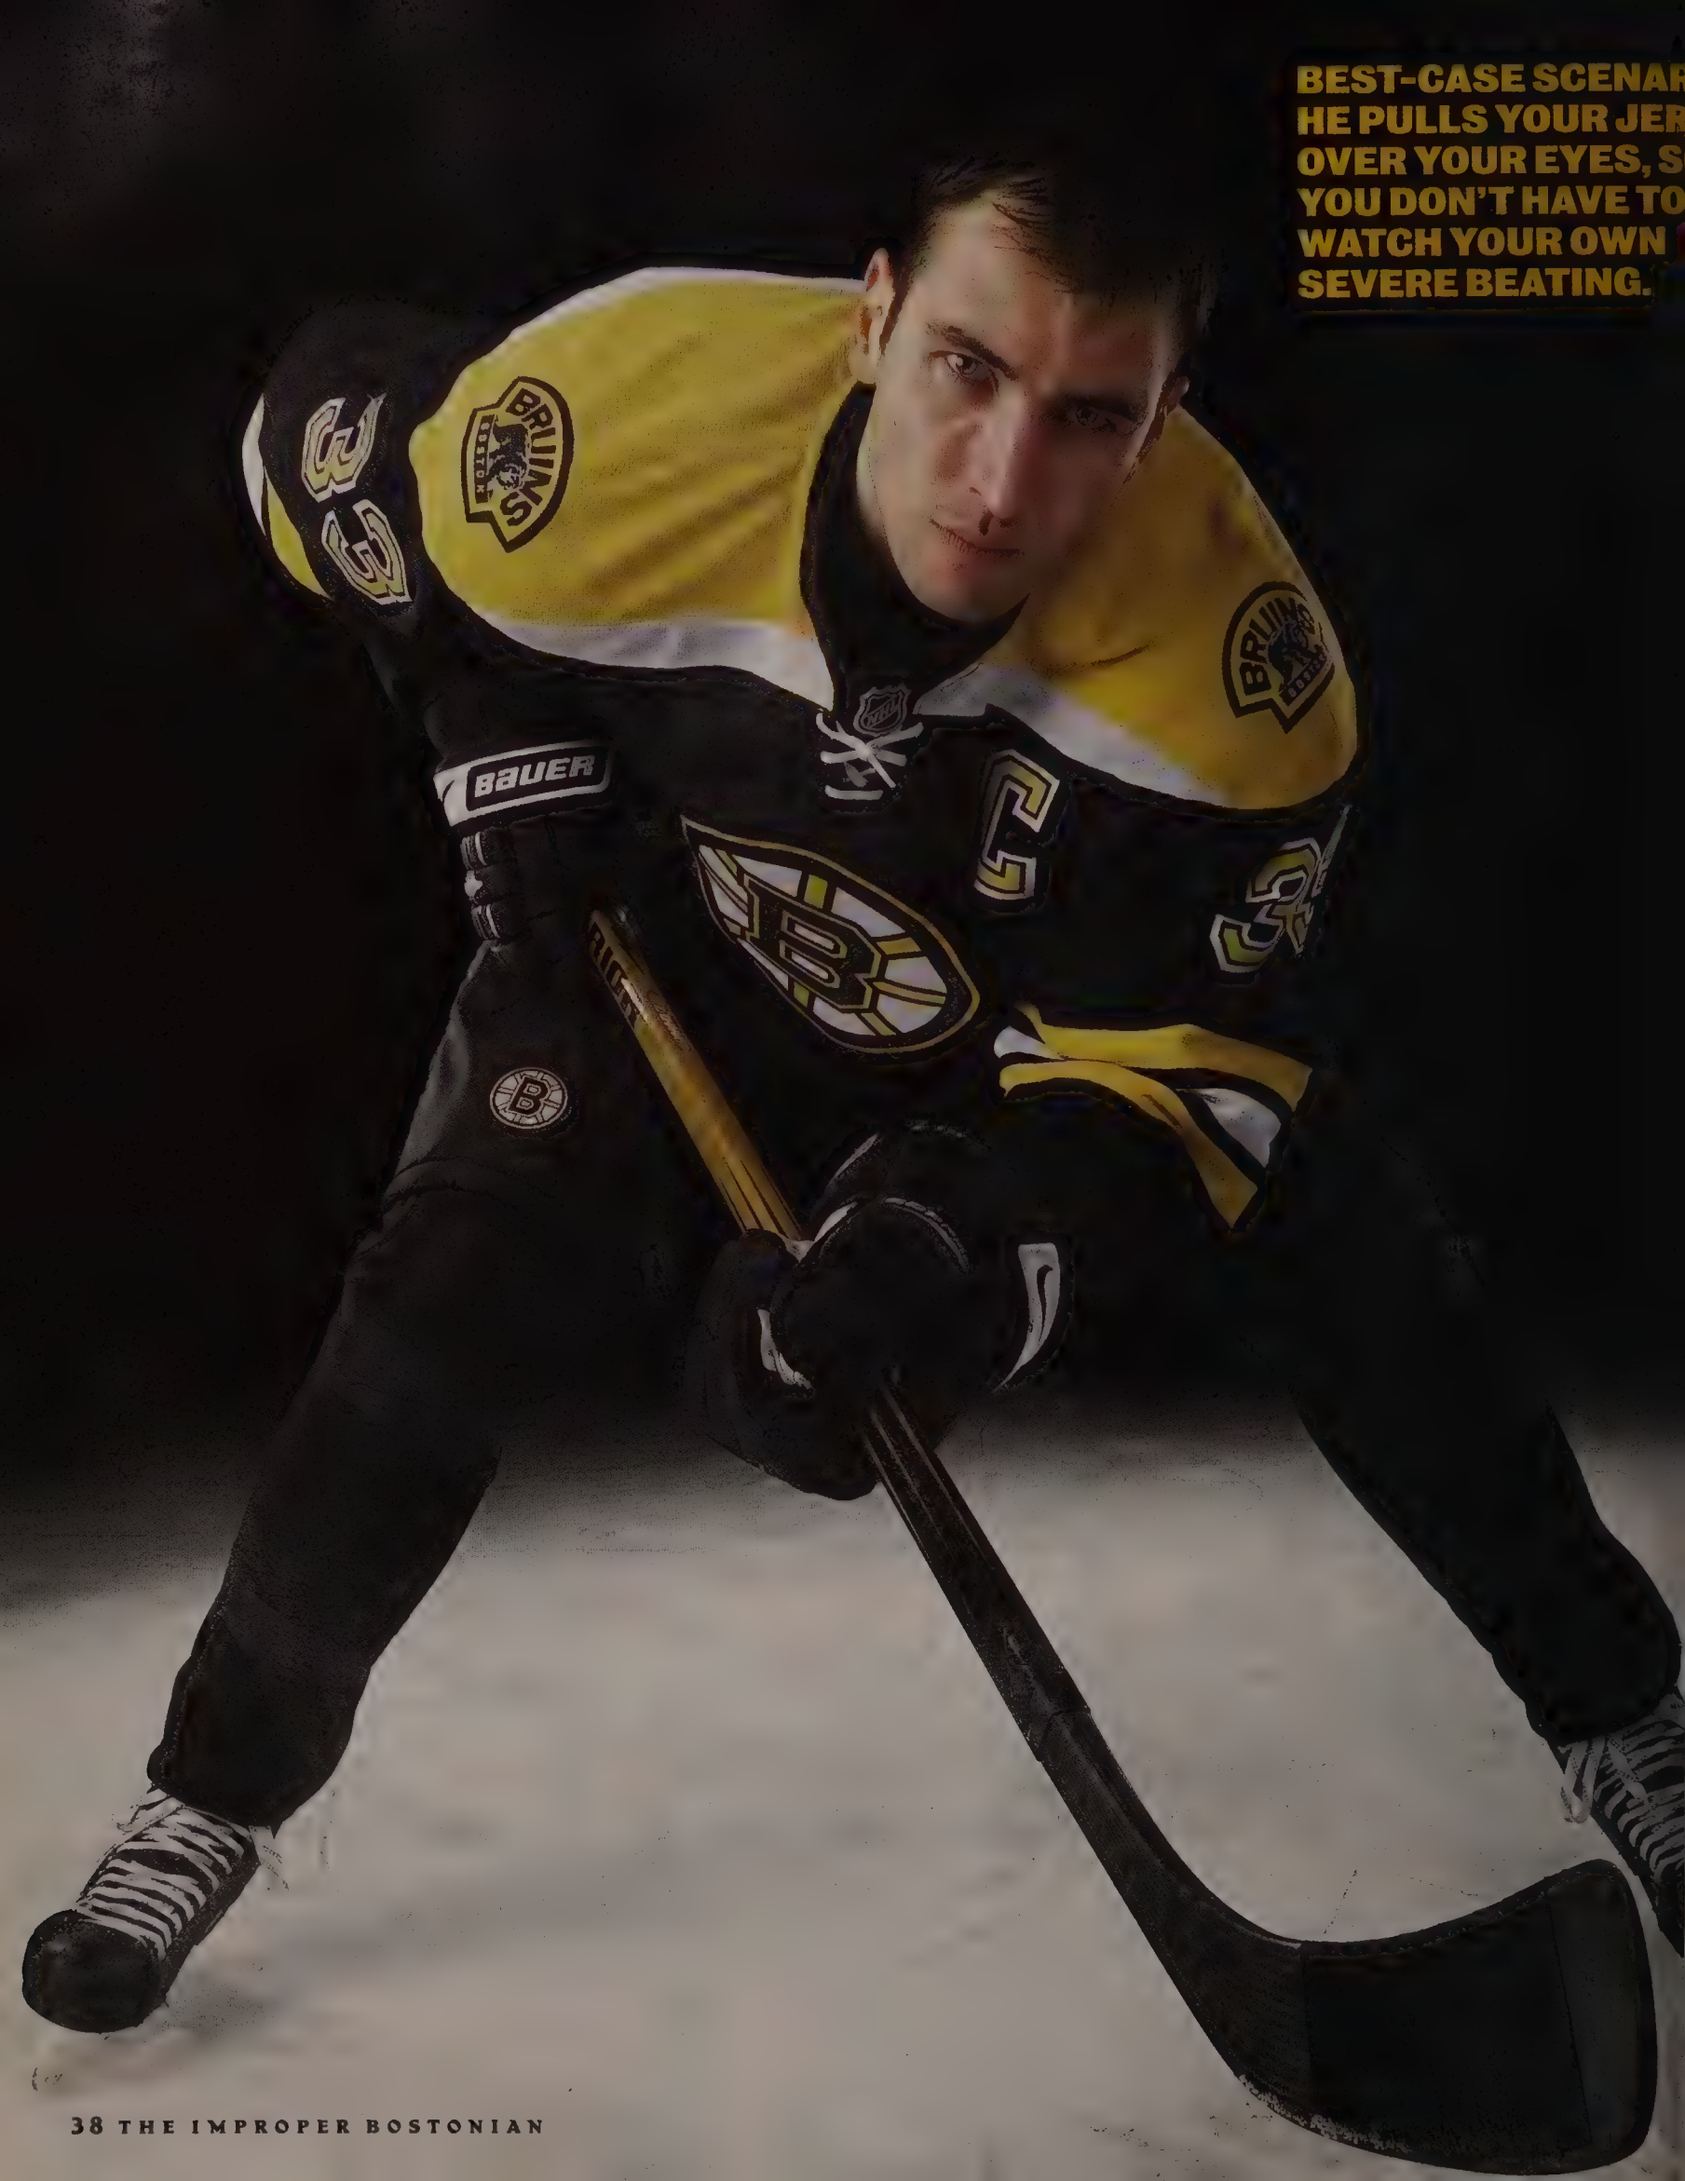
Are you better as a comedian or as a serious actress?
Oh, boy. Let's see. I think comedy is way harder, so I aspire to be a great comic actress, but I haven't had that many opportunities yet to do it. In the beginning, I was doing more comedic stuff more because of the material—they wanted the white trashy girl—than because of my abilities.

Worst part of living in Hollywood?
The fakeness of things. You scratch the surface of most relationships, both personally and professionally, and it's all kinda fake. It can take a toll on you, if you let it. That, and all the rejection. But you have to want it so badly that you're willing to hear "no" a million times.

Secret celebrity crush?
I do have one. It's not much of a secret, but Drew Barrymore is my absolute favorite. I've been ridiculously obsessed with her since I was a small child. I think I'd pass out if I met her.

Actor you most want to do a love scene with?
George Clooney.

Would you ever do a nude scene?
Hmm. Does anyone really want to see me doing a nude scene? I guess it would depend on the material. If it wasn't gratuitous and really served the material, I'd probably consider it.



Best-kept secret in the Berkshires?
Great question! It's the Dream Away Lodge on October Mountain. It's this little lodge that this gypsy-like woman named Mama Fresca used to run with her daughters. Now this guy Dan owns it. It's this great little eclectic place. Nothing matches. Lots of funky junk, and they play live music on Wednesdays.

Thing you miss most about New England?
Everything. The people. The tradition. And I miss the pizza. And I miss the fall. Nothing beats crisp fall air and the beautiful leaves.

What's the next step in your career?
For October Road to kick ass and become a hit show. And I'd really like to do some film.

Last question: Most embarrassing moment?
Way too many to count, but the most recent was when I was doing a romantic little scene on the show, and I was so into it, and I went running off camera as I was supposed to and took the biggest digger ever. Face first. And I have no doubt that my castmates will continue to make fun of me for the foreseeable future. ×××

THE ICEMAN SPEAKETH

BRUINS BRUISER ZDENO CHARA HAS A GENTLE SIDE, BUT YOU'LL NEVER SEE IT.

by RICH LEVINE photograph by KERRY BRETT

ZDENO CHARA will punch you right in the face. Honest to God he will. All you have to do is piss him off on the ice. Take a cheap shot at one of his teammates, run your mouth a little too much, hell, even look at him the wrong way, and the 6' 9", 255-pound Bruins captain will skate over and beat you like he just caught you in bed with his sister. Worst-case, you end up like David Koci, the 6' 6", 238-pound Blackhawks forward who missed a month of action after Chara rearranged his face in a fight so brutal it has its own Wikipedia entry.

Zdeno Chara will also do your dishes. Well, not yours per se, unless you're Tatiana Biskupicová–Chara's wife of nearly five months. Last summer, after 10 years together, the high school sweethearts got married in their native Slovakia, which means that Chara not only has the weight of a rigorous NHL season on his enormous shoulders, but also life as a newlywed.

It's an interesting coexistence for the 30-year-old, and as I sit down to talk with him over a drink at the Four's, there are two major questions on my mind. First, how difficult is it for a man who gets paid to inflict pain to go home and play the role of a warm, loving husband? And second, what are the chances he'll break a chair over my head after I ask him how he keeps his wife happy?

ON THE ICE

First, the big man wants to talk hockey. And why not? The Bruins are having themselves a pretty good year, a fact that's unfortunately flown largely under the radar in this city. If Boston's sports teams were the cast of Friends, the B's would be Lisa Kudrow. On their own, they're a solid catch, but when placed in the same arena as Jennifer Aniston and Courteney Cox, they simply don't look as appealing. Still, at press time the B's—who were projected to be the worst team in the NHL by Sports Illustrated—are well above .500 and poised to make a run at the playoffs. Chara feels pretty good about the way things are going thus far.

"We've started well," he says. "We've played ourselves into a bunch of close games, and we're just missing a little bit of scoring. But everything is fine, we're going to get that together." Part of that lack of scoring stems from the absence of Patrice Bergeron, the team's 22-year-old star center, who hasn't played since Oct. 27 when he was on the wrong side of an illegal hit from the Flyers' Randy Jones. Afterwards, Chara sat and watched as one of his most talented teammates was carried off the ice on a stretcher. He knew that as the team's largest player and defensive enforcer, some people would look toward him to even the score. "It was still a tie game when that hit happened, and when it's close you can't just lose your mind and go for revenge right away. You have to be smart about it and play the game to win. But the thing to know is that this isn't the last time you'll be playing these teams, so there's going to be plenty of time to address the issue." Pity Randy Jones the next time the Bruins and Flyers cross paths.

OFF THE ICE

"Do you have herbal tea?"

"No, I'm sorry, we only have iced tea."

"Oh, OK, then I'll just have a cranberry juice please. No ice."

No, my seventh-grade Home Ec teacher hasn't sat down with us. This is what one of the baddest dudes in the NHL orders at the bar. Is it a rare glimpse at his soft side? Nope. Turns out he's fighting a cold. His wife's feeling it, too. In fact, we were supposed to check out the pair's North End apartment this afternoon, but with Tatiana under the weather, Chara wants to let her rest. He tries to make things easier for her, knowing that being a professional athlete doesn't always lend itself to being a professional husband.

"I think all the wives on the team know how time-consuming a job this is, and Tatiana totally understands. She does her best to keep herself busy, but it's not easy." When Chara is at home, they make the most of it, acting "pretty much like you'd expect any couple to." They'll head over to the gym, maybe have a nice dinner in the North End. They love going to the movies. Chara talks about how much they liked The Departed, and says they can't wait to check out American Gangster. Nor is Tatiana sitting through the cinematic gunfights in order to please her man. "No way," he says. "She loves them. I'm actually the one who usually wants to see the chick flicks."

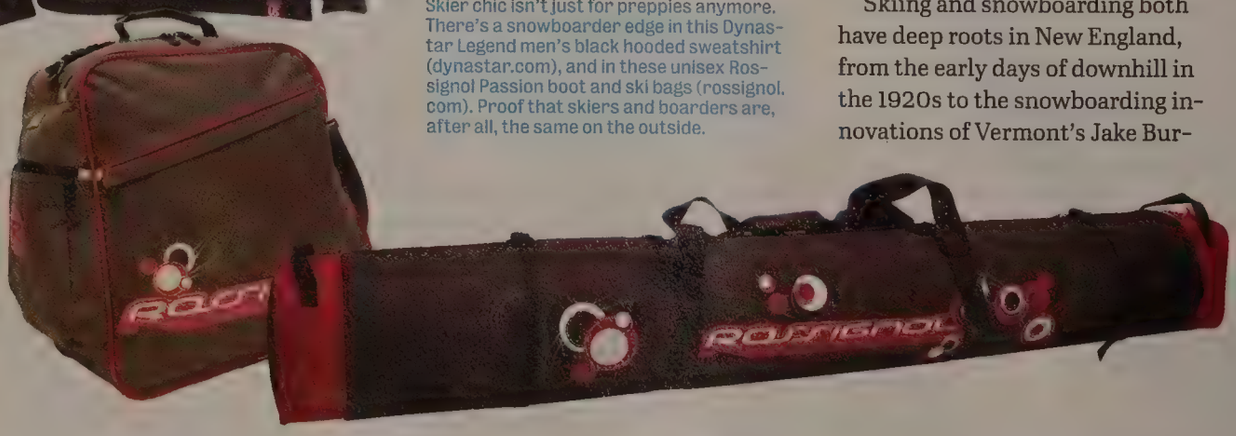
He's no slouch on the domestic front either. "I do a bunch of things. I'll do the dishes, vacuum, and if something needs to be fixed, I'll take care of it. I'm not the kind of guy who's going to have a nail sticking out of the wall and call a guy to come fix it." How about shopping? "No, no. My wife takes care of all that. I'd get lost if I went into the grocery store."

A common bond between the newlyweds is a love for learning. Both are fluent in English, and not because it was jammed down their throats in school. "We just did it for our knowledge," Chara says, as if picking up a second language is no big deal. "We didn't want to be those people in the States who can only just nod their heads while people are speaking to them." He also speaks German and Swedish.

THE FUTURE

Life at home may be tranquil, but Chara's got a lot left to do on the ice. As a player, he's certainly built an enviable résumé, including a contract that pays him $7.5 million a year until 2011, two All-Star appearances and the big fat C on his jersey. But he hasn't laid a glove on the ultimate prize. "The Stanley Cup is the one thing we all play for. To get that cup and raise it over your head, that's the dream. We're in the process of making the playoffs. That's the first priority. I think we have the players to do it. We're just going to keep fighting for every point."

At home, his goals may be a little less immediate, but certainly not any less challenging. "At some point we obviously want to have children and a family, but right now we're not in any sort of rush," he says. "We're just focused on living life, having fun and trying to become the best people that we can." ✖✖✖



An Improper Investigative Report

COLLISION COURSE

BRIDGING THE SNOWBOARD >< SKI DIVIDE

BY MATT HEID // PHOTOGRAPHS BY JÖRG MEYER

Skier chic isn't just for preppies anymore. There's a snowboarder edge in this Dynastar Legend men's black hooded sweatshirt (dynastar.com), and in these unisex Rossignol Passion boot and ski bags (rossignol.com). Proof that skiers and boarders are, after all, the same on the outside.

On the corner of Comm. Ave. and Amory Street, a yellow sign perches on a stand made from a broken skateboard. It features a single word splattered in colorful spray paint: UNDERGROUND. An arrow points along the adjoining building, where huge, blotchy paintings show a snowboarder catching air. At the end of the block, underneath an orange awning, steps descend into a hub of snowboarder culture.

A skateboard ramp stretches from wall to wall at one end of this subterranean shop. Rap and rock music bump in the background. Travis Reitano, 24, is the assistant store manager. He sports a stubbly beard, a loose white T-shirt and a plaid baseball hat turned backwards. "Like the sign says," he grins, pointing to the entrance, "the fun starts here."

Ski Market, a regional chain, occupies most of the above-ground portion of the same building. Ivy climbs its gray-brick façade. Inside, pop music washes over the generic retail environment. Skis and boots line bare walls in back. Then–assistant store manager Kristy McNiff, clean-cut in a striped shirt, stands behind the counter. Based on appearances, you wouldn't guess that the two shops are one enterprise. "It's the same company," McNiff explains. "We're just trying to cater to different markets. It's a good visual expression of the distance between them."

Skiing and snowboarding both have deep roots in New England, from the early days of downhill in the 1920s to the snowboarding innovations of Vermont's Jake Burton in the 1980s. But as the folks at Ski Market and Underground attest, the sports attract different crowds. According to a 2006 survey by the Snowsports Industry Association (SIA), the average age of downhill skiers hovers around 32. For snowboarders, it's 20.

"The stereotype is that snowboarders have a little more fun," McNiff says. Reitano isn't going to argue that point. "For the most part, our customers are open-minded, fun-loving people," he says. "Skiers are more traditional, older. Snowboarders take a lot from the skateboarder image, the partyers. Here's a good example." He pulls out a rectangular wrap-around label with the words "Belches Sparkling Road Soda" written across it. Its purple pop imagery and list of ingredients (shradical factor: 100 percent) are meant to disguise a container of alcohol. Burton Snowboards—a huge snowsports juggernaut run by Jake Burton himself—produces the "420 Kit," a wallet-sized satchel for storing a rider's "green" goods and accessories.

Snowboarding's skater roots are perhaps best on display at the terrain park. Now standard at nearly every downhill venue, these areas include a series of rails, ramps, half-pipes and other structures for jumps, spins, slides and tricks—many of them skater-inspired. In Enfield, N.H., Whaleback Mountain devotes 20 percent of its area to a terrain park. "Snowboarders are a bit more progressive," says Evan Dybvig, an owner and managing member. "They're a little bit ahead of skiing in terms of the style, the music, the trends. Culturally, they're still the leader."

But that doesn't mean New England skiers are powder puffs. "There are definitely skiers who can throw down hardcore," says customer Earle Harmon as he peruses the Underground's gear. Eric Friedman, marketing director for Vermont's Mad River Glen, concurs. "The New England ski culture is a lot more hardcore than other places," he says. "They come whether it's good or bad. They show up no matter the conditions. They take it as it is. They come to ski for the experience."

Mad River Glen is one of only four ski areas in the country that prohibit snowboarding. "One of the perceptions is that there are unruly snowboarders," Friedman says. "I don't think it's necessarily true, but a lot of these kids haven't been brought up in a typical snow mountain culture, and lift line etiquette isn't necessarily ingrained. The other part of snowboarding is that half your turns are blind. There are people who are nervous skiing around them."

According to SIA statistics, the active New England downhill population is split almost evenly between skiers (470,000) and snowboarders (431,000). The numbers show another trend: Downhill skiing is on the skids. Participation has been in steady decline for nearly 20 years. In 1996, an estimated 10.5 million Americans went downhill skiing at least twice. By 2006, that numbered had dropped to 6.4 million. In the same period, snowboarding participation rose from 3.7 million to 5.2 million.

"We've had some of our busiest seasons the past few years," Friedman says. "But I look at the future as a critical situation. Some of our best days might be behind us." This is particularly true as the ski population ages and begins to retire from the slopes.

Within the past five years, however, skiing has begun to borrow from the styles and trends of snowboarding. "Cultures are becoming more merged with the addition of freestyle skiing," McNiff notes. Twin-tip skis, which slide both frontward and backward, have opened up the doors for trick skiing. And the more intense graphics of snowboarding have begun to appear more frequently on skis—for example, the twin-tip Salomon skis with a wild pattern of blue, pink, green, black and red with half a monkey face peering out in between.

This new breed of freestyle skier is tackling the jumps and ramps of terrain parks, once the sole domain of snowboarders. "The lines between skiing and snowboarding have totally blurred," Dybvig adds. "We're seeing at least as many skiers in the parks. It seems to me that ski technology has changed a lot with the advent of snowboarding. People are starting to come up with different ways of sliding down the hill. Skis are really experiencing a radical change."

As this new generation of skiers mixes it up with their snowboarding brethren, the convergence of the two cultures will continue. "One of the great things about snowboarding is that it's really given skiing a kick in the ass," Friedman reflects. "It's added a boost to the whole sport." ✖✖✖

PISTE OFF

A SKI SEASON PRIMER FOR PEOPLE WHO HATE TO SKI

WHEN I was 7, my grandparents flew me to Taos, N.M., to visit my younger cousins—magical creatures who lived in a house made of adobe, played with wild lizards and, most important, knew how to ski. And they were going to teach me! I couldn't wait! The thing is that 5-year-olds don't know how to teach 7-year-olds how to ski. My grandparents snapped "beginner skis" to my little boots and sent me on my merry way. Zach and Laura pushed me off the chairlift, the chairlift whacked me in the head, they told me to follow them, they disappeared in a flurry of powder, and I scooted slowly down the mountain on my then-bony butt. I ended up with a fat lip and a blistering sunburn on my eyelids. And I decided that skiing was stupid.

BY Carmen Nobel ILLUSTRATIONS BY Jun Park

The decision stuck. The mere thought of skiing makes my eyes hurt. But many of my friends ski, and sometimes in the winter, the only way to spend any time with them is to follow them to a ski resort. I'm not unique in this regard. "There's always a certain number of random people who don't ski," says Doug Brown, a product manager and skier from Cambridge who has shared a group house in Sugarbush, Vt. "Often they're just there to hang out and see the friends they never see in Boston."

Fortunately, New England's ski towns offer plenty of winter activities for people who hate to ski. What follows is a primer for non-skiers, a guide to enjoying ski season without having to strap deathtraps to your feet.

LOOKING THE PART

Before you head to the hills for a non-ski weekend, you may feel self-conscious about being the only one in the lodge without rosy cheeks and windblown locks. As far as I can tell, achieving a healthy glow is the only point in paying for a lift ticket. But it's not necessary to go skiing to get a windswept face. Heck, it's not even necessary to go outside.

I prove my point with a visit to the Berkeley Street branch of Mario Russo's salon (cuts start at $65). As the man who used to do Johnny Damon's famous tresses, Russo knows from sporty. An avid skier himself, he plans to open a new salon in Stowe, Vt., in April.

After assessing my mousy locks and "classic square" face, Russo gives me a layered cut that makes me appear decidedly less block-headed and more windswept.

Still, "You're really going to need color to get that sunkissed look," Russo says. He suggests a French highlighting technique called Balayage (price quoted upon consultation), which employs a paintbrush and a paddle in lieu of foils. Upon completion, my hair seems like it took a sunny vacation without me. Now it's time to do something about my pallor.

"You're a white girl," says makeup artist Rosanne Lopez. She goes to work with a pale beige foundation and a rosy blush.

Voilà. I'm a faux ski bunny!

LOOKING THE PART, BUDGET VERSION

Rub a dry washcloth over your cheeks for 10 minutes and hide your sorry hair under a ski hat.

THE GREAT OUTDOORS ON YOUR BUTT

If you're anything like me, your main beef with skiing and snowboarding isn't the time you'll spend outside, but rather the time you'll spend falling on your ass. For folks like us, it makes more sense to look for activities that let us begin on our butts and stay there.

For starters, there are dog sled tours, which vary from hour-long trips to all-day excursions, led by teams of hearty huskies and their trainers. Peace Pups Dog Sledding ($220, double occupancy) will take you for a spin around Stowe in Vermont, for example. The Muddy Paw Sled Dog Kennel ($165, double occupancy) offers rides around the Sunday River Ski Resort in Maine.

"You basically just sit there, they put you in a blanket, and the dogs pull you around," Brown says. "It's great."

Similarly easy is snow tubing—a "sport" in which riders whoosh down mountains in glorified inner tubes. It's like sledding, but better: Motorized pulleys tow riders back to the top of the course, so there's no lugging.

"We call it a high-thrill and low-skill sport," says Kathy Bennett, marketing director for Cranmore Mountain Resort in New Hampshire.

For those who prefer transportation with an engine, there's snowmobiling. Most tours include state-of-the-art machines, with heated handlebars for weather wusses. Still, just holding on often results in sore arm muscles. "You need to go home with some kind of hobble, even if you don't get it from the mountain," says Alex Kaufman, communications director at Sunday River. "And after [snowmobiling] you're going to need a massage."

MASSAGE IN A BOTTLE. AND A BODY WRAP.

Many ski and snowboarding fanatics soothe their sore muscles with a trip to a massage therapist.

But there's no shame in getting a head start on relaxation by skipping the slopes entirely and heading straight to the spa. Taking a suitcase out of the trunk of your car can strain muscles, too, and walking from the car to the lodge means exposing your skin to the harsh elements. Whew. You need a manicure and a facial, for sure! Pretty much every ski area in New England sports multiple day spas, and you're likely to have good luck booking an appointment while other suckers are on the slopes.

These are no half-baked sweat shops. The Jordan Spa at Sunday River offers a variety of massages and body treatments, including "Milk and Honey Body Polish" ($80) and "Aroma Body Wrap" ($60). The "Aqua Solarium" at the Spa at Stoweflake in Stowe includes a 12-foot hydrotherapy waterfall and a Hungarian mineral soaking pool. Stoweflake's spa also contains a 4,000-square-foot garden labyrinth, featuring regional flowers used in treatments such as "the Gentleman's Mountain Herbal Facial" ($125).

I SCREAM FOR COMPLIMENTARY SAMPLES

Granted, even just an hour in the spa can set you back a hundred bucks or more. For a more cost-effective moment of indoor bliss, check out the Ben & Jerry's factory tour ($3), located in Waterbury, Vt., a stone's throw from Stowe. For three bucks, you'll enjoy a seven-minute "moovie" on the history of the ice cream company, a chance to see pints of Cherry Garcia tripping down a conveyer belt and, of course, samples of fresh ice cream in the "FlavoRoom." Tours commence in the morning, so this is a great place to start a day of non-skiing. Ice cream for breakfast is why lactose tolerance was invented.

If you're staying near Sugarbush, you can while away the hours nursing a slow lunch at the Warren Store—a community center, country store and eatery that serves hearty sandwiches such as the Pestopalooza and the Godzilla.

THE SOUND AND THE SCHADENFREUDE

If you need proof positive that skipping the slopes was a good idea, then grab a window seat at the Foggy Goggle. Situated in the South Ridge Lodge at Sunday River, the Foggy Goggle is a popular pub that overlooks the beginner slope. It is, therefore, the perfect place to watch frozen fools fall down all day while you enjoy a hot toddy.

The pub is also popular with the true après-ski crowd, thanks to a big fireplace and occasional performances by local bands. In fact, ski towns in New England are surprisingly good music venues. The White Cap Lodge brew haus at Sunday River has hosted Entrain, Assembly of Dust and Little Feat. The Wobbly Barn Steakhouse in Killington, Vt., features acts such as Spit Roast Muppet and Screaming Broccolli (sic). Upcoming bands at the Pickle Barrel, another club in Killington, include the Rustic Overtones and Go Go Gadget. Not household names, exactly, but it beats banging your head against a string of moguls.

OUR DAILY SPECIAL IS GRILLED SALMON AND NO DAMN SKIING

Eating, of course, is a great alternative to skiing. And skiers and non-skiers alike maintain that Choices Restaurant and Rotisserie in Killington is among the best mountain eateries around, especially for meat lovers. (Sitting by the rotisserie is also a good way to achieve an ersatz windburn.)

The bar at Choices is big, friendly and full of locals who are desperate to talk about something other than skiing. Trish the bartender is known to be a good source of information about local politics, which around here can mean fighting words with activists who want to secede from Vermont. Sedition makes for excellent barroom banter.

Another good bet for hanging with the locals is the Funky Red Barn near Sunday River, a friendly bar that's popular among loggers, according to Kaufman. Among skiers, the Funky Red Barn is "the anchor to anyone's bar crawl," Kaufman says, but early in the evening it's thankfully empty of the downhill crowd. Silly, silly fools.

Glamour Girl

The Back Bay's Tonya Chen Mezrich crafts jewelry—and the perfect look.

TONYA CHEN MEZRICH is your best friend with the better wardrobe. At least, that's the conclusion I reach after trading makeup tricks, sifting through her closet and drooling over her glittery Christian Louboutins. The licensed dentist and brains behind Jewel Design by Tonya manages to rock the frills with a no-frills attitude, whether strolling around the Back Bay or at a book party for husband Ben Mezrich, author of Bringing Down the House and Rigged. With Vegas at their fingertips, it seems fitting that she's mastered dressing to the nines.

BY Amanda Knorr PHOTOGRAPHS BY Alan Gwizdowski

IMPROPER BOSTONIAN: How do you do the day-to-night look?
Tonya Chen Mezrich: I darken my makeup. For daytime I'm pretty casual and wear jeans or Lululemon workout clothes. Recently for the day, I just put on mascara, eyeliner and blush. At night, I'm into the smoky-eye, pale-lip look.

Tell us your beauty secrets!
I love permanent eyelash extensions. The only problem is when you wear sunglasses; they can hit the lenses! But you wake up and look like you have makeup on. If you're too scared to do permanent, though, I also get the CVS kind and cut them in half to make a demi-extension. And I like to mix glosses. I just bought two new [ones] and didn't like either by itself, but together I love them.

Favorite products?
Maybelline Great Lash is awesome and inexpensive. A new find I love is the Youth as We Know It by Bliss. It makes your skin really soft and smooth. Also, Laura Mercier tinted moisturizer because it has SPF, but also evens out your complexion.

How'd you get into jewelry?
I started about six years ago. A friend of mine from dental school made some of her own and told me it was easy. I started making them for myself. I can get exactly what I want now.

Where do you sell your creations?
I sell at Stil on Newbury Street, Moxie on Charles Street and Exhale day spa on Arlington Street.

What's next for your jewelry line?
I'm working on a line that will come from charms I bought at flea markets in Paris.

Other places you love to shop?
Barbara Bui and Christian Louboutin in Paris, and Intermix and Saks in Boston.

True Religion jeans are my all-time favorite, and Hudson is a close second.

Item you go crazy for?
Jeans! True Religion jeans are my all-time favorite, and Hudson is a close second.

Judging from your closet, you could use some more room…
I should throw out more than I do! It's hard for me to get rid of stuff. I'm like a pack rat. Usually if I haven't worn it in three years, I'll get rid of it or give it to my sister. ✖✖✖

Take a Conceptual Seat

CHAIRS TO YOU

Like mooning a busload of nuns, the act of building a big, conceptual art installation is meant to provoke. You don't cut a shark in half or glue 500 teddy bears together without harboring an impish sense of fun, and Scottish artist Jim Lambie is no exception. Known for his playful use of duct tape and his DJ credentials on the Glasgow club scene, Lambie's new installation at the MFA—titled RSVP: Jim Lambie—consists of 50 chairs sliced in half and stuck to the wall of the museum's West Wing Galleria. The chairs glimmer and pulse, but mostly they pose the question, "Why are there 50 chairs stuck to a wall?" Which is really what it's all about.

Movies Edited by Nick Altschuller and Amanda Knorr

American Gangster ★★★ There's nothing you haven't seen a dozen times before in Ridley Scott's pulpy film that traces the rise and fall of Harlem's vicious heroin kingpin, Frank Lucas. But even an old tune can be catchy if it's played well, and it's hard to think of two actors who are more fun to watch right now than Denzel Washington and Russell Crowe. As the uptight Lucas, Denzel's Wall Street tailoring and Sidney Poitier diction makes him stand out like the lone Republican in a swarm of Superflys. By contrast, Crowe's slovenly, workaholic Jersey cop is a bundle of frayed nerves and ruined relationships, but he's the only man tireless enough to bring Lucas down. Steven Zaillian's screenplay is cobbled together from equal parts Scarface and Heat, but it's a blast to see the silky-smooth Washington bump up against Crowe's boisterous Pacino impersonation. Scott's direction is less ostentatious than usual, and he smartly stays out of their way. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Bee Movie ★½ Those sobering statistics about disappearing bees may have something to do with climate change. Or it could be that our fuzzy friends are fleeing in embarrassment from Jerry Seinfeld's relentless promotional blitz for this lame kiddie movie. In case you somehow haven't heard, the stand-up comic lends his voice to Barry B. Benson, a curious insect who leaves the hive and strikes up an icky romance with Renée Zellweger's gurgly-voiced florist. When Barry discovers that humans have enslaved his fellow bees for the mass production of honey, a nonsensical lawsuit ensues, which prompts a slight ecological disaster and self-congratulatory cameos from the likes of Ray Liotta and Oprah. Seinfeld's milquetoast observational humor hasn't aged particularly well, and as typical of DreamWorks animated productions, the character designs are ugly and the backgrounds indistinct. It's hard to imagine what children are going to take away from this muddled affair, besides a sinister message to be mindful of your station in life and do what you're told. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Before the Devil Knows You're Dead ★★★½ Disproving the theory that folks mellow with age, 83-year-old director Sidney Lumet enters his fifth decade of filmmaking with the nastiest, most fatalistic thriller of his career. Philip Seymour Hoffman and Ethan Hawke star as financially strapped brothers who attempt to cover debts by knocking off a suburban jewelry store. It's literally a mom-and-pop operation run by their parents (Albert Finney and Rosemary Harris), which sends this seemingly simple bungled heist perilously close to Greek tragedy. Kelly Masterson's screenplay is a grim puzzle-box that zips back and forth through time to savor the Murphy's Law developments. In lesser hands, this could have been a glib Tarantino clone, but Lumet's austere, unobtrusive style allows his actors plenty of room to run and linger on old familial resentments, which develops an emotional resonance rare for this kind of gimmicky crime flick. As always, Hoffman is brilliant, his closed-off cruelty an excellent foil for Hawke's wounded puppy dog performance. (At Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Beowulf ★★ CGI Performance Capture, the creepiest technique in modern filmmaking, attaches newfangled gizmos to an actor, burns their movements onto a hard drive, and spits out an eerie hybrid of photography and animation. Pioneered by director Robert Zemeckis for The Polar Express, this unsettling procedure produces dead-eyed likenesses of famous actors, who then wobble across the screen weightlessly. This time around, Zemeckis takes on that problematic old poem about something rotten in Denmark circa the sixth century, and thus grants hefty character actor Ray Winstone a buff movie star bod, so he can strip naked constantly and battle the sniveling demon Grendel. Angelina Jolie vamps it up as the monster's mommy in this weirdly sexualized adaptation. Some theaters are showing Beowulf in 3-D, which, if you must, is the way to go. The leaden, humorless screenplay by Neil Gaiman and Roger Avary feels less oppressive when all manner of swords and limbs are flying in your face. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Blade Runner: The Final Cut ★★★★ Twenty-five years after it was originally released and some 15 years since the previous "director's cut," Ridley Scott's landmark, retro-futuristic noir gets one last pass through the editing bay for a few minor alterations noticeable only to the most hard-core fans. What's most important is that the film has been painstakingly restored in a gorgeous 35mm print, and as Blade Runner's enduring power lies in its dreamy and immersive use of physical space, a theatrical viewing is practically mandatory. Sure, Harrison Ford's mopey performance as a depressed android hunter is still a gaping hole in the film, and ditto for his forbidden relationship with Sean Young's replicant, but it's a movie more interested in atmosphere, with a haunting, neon grandeur which casts a spell during even the slackest sequences. Besides, sourpuss Ford throws Rutger Hauer's iconic, electrifying villain into sharper

Todd Haynes breaks down the biopic.

I'm Not There
Starring Christian Bale, Cate Blanchett, Marcus Carl Franklin, Richard Gere, Heath Ledger and Ben Whishaw, all as Bob Dylan. Screenplay by Todd Haynes and Oren Moverman. Directed by Todd Haynes. At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.

LAST WEEK I FINALLY caught up with Anton Corbijn's Control, the melancholy biography of doomed Joy Division frontman Ian Curtis. Handsomely mounted and extremely well made, there was nothing at all wrong with the picture. Yet at the same time I found myself immeasurably bored, sneaking out for a cigarette, waiting for the poor sod to just kill himself already and wondering if I honestly needed to sit through another biopic ever again. These films become an epidemic as we approach Oscar season, and they all seem to conform to the same habitual stodginess, like my old Catholic-school textbooks about the lives of the saints. continued on page 58

But now there's I'm Not There, director Todd Haynes' astounding, practically cubist portrait of Bob Dylan, which explodes decades' worth of stale genre tropes with the kind of playful punk sneer you'd expect from the protagonist himself. For starters, Haynes casts half a dozen different Dylans, none of whom are even named Bob, and spills their separate sagas in radically contrasting cinematic styles. Cutting in and out of each tale on a lark, Haynes overlaps emotions in a giddy rush of sensory overload. I'm Not There is plugged-in, perplexing and exhilarating.

OK, the approach sounds insane, but actually makes a lot of sense when you stop and think about it. People in general tend to be inconsistent and unsettled, and the only constant in anybody's life is change. How can one film, shot in one style, with one single award-friendly lead performance do any justice to the sidewinding complexities of an entire lifetime? Especially if we're talking about Dylan, who's spent the past 40-odd years confounding expectations, shedding personas and stubbornly, often angrily, refusing to be pigeonholed. Haynes' multiple-choice casting coup might be the only way any filmmaker could truly take on all of Dylan's back pages.

We begin with Marcus Carl Franklin, a young black child 30 years behind the times, calling himself Woody Guthrie and riding the rails with a guitar. It's a daffy choice that comically sums up all the canny ways young Robert Zimmerman made himself over as a hobo during the formative years of his career. This timeframe slips into an expertly staged phony documentary about Christian Bale's earnest, work-shirted folkie Jack Rollins, already tiring of his acclaim. It isn't long before our "troubadour of conscience" is drunkenly lashing out from his unwanted throne as spokesman for a generation.

This snake begins eating its own tail once Heath Ledger turns up as a hotshot young actor rocketing to stardom, thanks to his role in a shamelessly Hollywood-ized Jack Rollins biopic, glimpses of which are turgid and clichéd enough to make even the most literal-minded viewer grateful for such a gonzo take on the subject. As evidenced by his refreshingly straight-faced melodrama Far From Heaven, Haynes is a brilliant mimic behind the lens. His movie-within-a-movie arrangement allows I'm Not There to not only mock the picture it might have been, but also lets Ledger's storyline affectionately ape Jean-Luc Godard's late-'60s films, which chronicle Dylan's first marriage in a series of moving ellipses and stray quotations.

Trickier to parse is Richard Gere's performance, as he roams a ruined Western landscape as a sort of B-side version of Billy the Kid, who somehow survived Pat Garrett's bullets, but loses in the end after his old nemesis sells the Civil War town to the Interstate Highway Commission. It's a bit mystifying at first, but eventually the subplot comes into focus not solely as commentary on Dylan's score for Sam Peckinpah's 1973 classic Pat Garrett and Billy the Kid, but also as an analogy for the anachronistic tall-tales found on Dylan's recent records, like Love and Theft or Modern Times.

The best of the bunch is Cate Blanchett, assigned the unenviable task of replicating Dylan at his most iconic. Sending up the snarling speed-freak of the early electric era, Blanchett not only summons all the right twitches, smirks, cigarette flourishes and nasally put-downs; she also nails the attitude cold. More than just a cross-dressing stunt, this is a genuinely miraculous performance, conveying untold depths of vulnerability and obnoxiousness while finding new angles on familiar footage and old quotes that fans have seen and heard a thousand times before.

It helps that Haynes shoots the segment as an extended homage to Federico Fellini's 8½, which also dealt with an adversarial relationship between an artist and his audience. Borrowing the maestro's crisp, wide-angle, black-and-white photography and surreal atmosphere, the extended sequence even offers a bouncy bit of Nino Rota's music on the soundtrack.

Haynes depicts Dylan "plugging-in" at the Newport Folk Festival by having Blanchett and company firing into the audience with machine guns. I'm Not There similarly blasts away at moldy biographical devices by being prankish, thrilling and sometimes as impenetrable as the subject himself. ✖✖✖ focus, with the central irony here being that the most human character in the film just happens to be a robot. (At Coolidge Corner.)

The Bourne Ultimatum ★★★★ As propulsive, brilliantly assembled and breathlessly paced as any action picture I've seen, the third and finest chapter in this superior spy saga finds Matt Damon's amnesiac assassin heading home to New York City to put together the final, harrowing puzzle pieces of his lost identity. United 93 director Paul Greengrass shoots exclusively with handheld cameras, supercharging the impeccably choreographed cat-and-mouse sequences with a jittery, you-are-there immediacy. As always, Damon deftly underplays, communicating the character's inner torment strictly through his sleek physicality and haunted stare. Joan Allen returns as a jaded CIA operative who becomes Bourne's most unlikely ally, this time butting heads with David Strathairn's oily armchair warrior. These Bourne pictures have shrewdly updated Robert Ludlum's Cold War novels for our more distrustful, troubled times and seethe with a profound loss of faith in our leaders. There's also a harsh moral severity at work—the killings hurt and carry with them a tremendous psychological price. This is classy, sophisticated entertainment for adults, and an outstanding example of sheer, brute-force craftsmanship. (In the suburbs.)

Dan in Real Life ★★ Pleasant enough and almost instantly forgettable, this well-photographed romantic comedy stars Steve Carell as a down-on-his-luck widower with three cloyingly cute daughters. En route to a family reunion in Rhode Island, Carell falls hard for Juliette Binoche, not realizing she's his brother's new girlfriend. As his brother is played by Dane Cook, one must pause and wonder in what kind of cruel and unfair universe a sophisticated goddess like Juliette Binoche would date a loutish MySpace comedian. In any case, Carell and Binoche make goo-goo eyes and share longing glances throughout the most trite family get-together ever captured on film. John Mahoney and Dianne Wiest are on hand as the grandparents who, as if on cue, deliver knowing chestnuts of wisdom through wrinkly smiles. The movie is so self-consciously warm and cozy it might as well be wearing a big fuzzy sweater. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Darjeeling Limited ★★★½ Already an icon to skinny-jeaned, suit-coated hipsters everywhere, director Wes Anderson makes a giant leap forward with this lyrical, melancholy tale of three estranged brothers traveling through India by train in an attempt to reconnect and find some sort of spiritual enlightenment. It's probably impossible to keep thoughts of Owen Wilson's well-publicized personal problems from affecting one's perception of his dark and impressive turn as the domineering oldest sibling, while Adrien Brody and Jason Schwartzman (who co-wrote the screenplay with Anderson and Roman Coppola) offer some very funny, sort-of-sad turns as similarly stunted man-children. Anderson's obsessive-compulsive set design, obnoxious color-coding and meticulous widescreen compositions can often feel like asphyxiating affectations, but somewhere along the way, Darjeeling blossoms into his messiest and most moving film to date, with flights of whimsy grounded for the first time in very human pain and confusion. The central motif, about letting go of baggage both physical and emotional, is annoyingly literal, but the obtuseness doesn't make it any less deeply felt. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Elizabeth: The Golden Age ★½ It might have boasted the breakout performance that rocketed Aussie firebrand Cate Blanchett to international superstardom, but it's worth remembering that 1998's Elizabeth was also a slightly silly picture, with some sly supporting turns keeping the overwrought melodrama from teetering over into camp. Alas, this soppy, belated sequel can't manage such a balancing act and inspires unintentional guffaws from the get-go. Perhaps realizing that the first picture developed a video afterlife as a favorite of teenage girls, director Shekhar Kapur has instructed Blanchett to play the 52-year-old monarch as if auditioning for High School Musical 3. Those dastardly Spanish Catholics are about to invade, but our Virgin Queen is busy giggling girlishly and being all moony-eyed for Clive Owen's Sir Walter Raleigh. Owen seems to be channeling Fabio as he prances around in a hilarious collection of costumes while over-enunciating cringe-worthy double entendres. Kapur's magisterial overhead shots and swirling 360-degree dolly shots are more headache-inducing than evocative. (In the suburbs.)

Fred Claus ★ The mere idea of Vince Vaughn playing Santa Claus' loser brother is enough to make you laugh. Throw in the brilliant casting of Paul Giamatti as Saint Nick, and it's hard not to imagine

Fred Claus as a holiday classic waiting to happen. But what should've been a diversion as light as 2003's Elf ends up feeling as laborious as that legendary 1985 Dudley Moore dud, Santa Claus: The Movie. Lavishly overbudgeted with enormous eyesore sets and creepy prosthetic makeup work, director David Dobkin's film ladles out enough plotlines for three separate movies and leaves Vaughn stuck sputtering some disappointingly PG riffs, unsure if he should rescue an orphan sidekick, reunite with his annoying girlfriend (Rachel Weisz) or try to keep Kevin Spacey's officious efficiency expert from closing Santa's workshop. Unable to even follow its own tortured logic, the movie veers from one overblown, saccharine set piece to another over a mirthless two hours. Bah, humbug. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Gone Baby Gone ★★★ Good news: Ben Affleck isn't embarrassing anymore. With his confident, downbeat directorial debut, the artist formerly known as Bennifer redeems himself, exhibiting a fantastic knack for getting the most out of Boston's grimmer locations while supplying a star-making role for his kid brother, Casey. Based on the novel by Dennis Lehane, Gone Baby Gone digs deep into the buried secrets of the Dorchester projects after the mysterious disappearance of a 4-year-old girl. As a conscience-stricken private detective, the younger Affleck is a modern-day Phillip Marlowe in a tracksuit as he navigates grungy barrooms and flings four-letter words before arriving at a moral dilemma that's all but impossible to resolve. The picture loses considerable steam in its second hour, with too many expository sequences required to resolve Lehane's knotty plotting. But the extraordinary final shot will provoke discussion and argument long after the closing credits have rolled and announces not just a morally complex vision, but also the arrival of a potentially great filmmaker. Who knew Ben still had it in him? (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix ★★★½ The Harry Potter films thus far have felt like a collection of tie-in products dutifully recreating everybody's favorite scenes as if genuflecting before the Stations of the Cross. But now, four sequels into this saga, it finally feels like we're watching an honest-to-god movie. Forced to slash JK Rowling's unwieldy 870-page novel to a trim two hours and change, director David Yates and screenwriter Michael Goldenberg have at last reconceived the Potter-verse in purely cinematic terms. They scrapped all that Quidditch nonsense and zero in on Harry's adolescent struggle to wrap his still-forming mind around the fallibility of authority figures, the finality of death and the stinking unfairness of how the world really works. It's a surprisingly dark and violent coming-of-age tale, and Yates finds some nifty visual parallels for the character's inner journey. Young Daniel Radcliffe is growing into the role quite nicely, and the most overqualified supporting cast in history again excels, with extra kudos going to Gary Oldman, Alan Rickman and Imelda Staunton's fascist schoolmarm. (In the suburbs.)

Into the Wild ★★★½ In 1990, Christopher McCandless (Emile Hirsch) donated his life savings to Oxfam, burned his Social Security card and disappeared down the highway into self-imposed obscurity. Rechristening himself "Alexander Supertramp," McCandless yearned to live the kind of pure existence he'd only read about in books by Henry David Thoreau and Jack London. Two years later he starved to death inside an abandoned bus in Alaska, barely 20 miles from the highway. Plenty of people consider McCandless a hero. Countless folk songs have been written about his journey, and that bus has become a popular tourist attraction. Just as many people, especially in Alaska, will tell you he was an idiot. The beauty of this film, written and directed by Sean Penn, is that it's both dreamy and lucid and filled with a deep respect for McCandless' ideals, but it never lets him off the hook for the spitefulness and naiveté inherent in his foolish, transcendent quest. It feels like a breakthrough for Penn as it throbs with color, possibilities and hope. (In the suburbs.)

Lars and the Real Girl ★★½ Genuine sweetness wrestles with whimsy-overload in director Craig Gillespie's gentle tale of a lonely, emotionally stunted young man (Ryan Gosling, laying it on a little thick) who orders a sex doll over the Internet and deludes himself into thinking she's real. Yes, this sounds incredibly icky, but Six Feet Under scribe Nancy Oliver's screenplay is surprisingly chaste, choosing to focus mainly on the affecting little ways this small snowy community tries to help their troubled neighbor by playing along with his fantasy. The best work comes from up-and-coming actor Paul Schneider, who recently stole scenes left and right in The Assassination of Jesse James, here playing Gosling's conflicted older brother with a stillness and warmth that trumps his costar's overly

Arms and the Man

Geat Minds Think Alike Ray Winstone's braggart hero is hardly a match for Angelina Jolie's 3-D assets in the sadly lifeless Beowulf.

mannered turn. Gillespie is a bit too in love with the wintry atmospherics and lets the pace slacken until the audience ends up two or three scenes ahead of the movie. Some nice moments, though. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Lions for Lambs ★½ Probably one of the least cinematic movies ever made, Robert Redford's latest directorial effort seeks to engage, alarm and activate an apathetic American public. Unfortunately, the road to hell is paved with good intentions, and Lions for Lambs mistakenly assumes there's nothing more energizing or entertaining than watching movie stars sit around in drab offices lecturing one another about the war on terror. Redford plays a disillusioned college professor chastising a callow slacker while his two favorite students (Derek Luke and Michael Peña) get shot down in Afghanistan and groan in agony for dramatic counterpoint. Meanwhile, back in D.C., Tom Cruise is a lip-smackingly evil Republican senator, yapping in circles around Meryl Streep's burnt-out journalist. Cruise's delicious insincerity is the only entertaining thing in the film as he regurgitates neocon talking points and flashes that trademark toothy grin. Eventually you start to feel like Redford's beleaguered student, spending an hour and a half on the receiving end of a blustery, condescending sermon from an out-of-touch old man. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Lust, Caution ★★ The title could probably apply to any of Ang Lee's pictures, from The Ice Storm to Brokeback Mountain, as this immensely gifted filmmaker has made a career out of chronicling the countless heartbreaking ways our basic human emotions are often thwarted and repressed by rigid codes of social conduct. Strange then that this film is such a non-starter. Adapted by Lee's regular screenwriters, James Schamus and Wang Hui-ling, from a short story by Eileen Chang, this WWII drama stars newcomer Wei Tang as an ambitious drama student in occupied Shanghai who seduces a sadistic government official (Hong Kong movie legend Tony Leung) as part of a recklessly conceived assassination plan. Bloated and sluggish, the movie substitutes unpleasantly graphic, confusingly acrobatic sex scenes for emotional connections. Leung's natural charisma, so blinding in films by John Woo and Wong Kar-wai, has been muffled down to a dull authoritarian drone. There's simply not enough going on between the lines to support the epic running time. (In the suburbs.)

Margot at the Wedding ★★★ Nicole Kidman stars as the worst mother since Medea, or at least since Livia Soprano, a neurotic, passive-aggressive bundle of nerves who begins the movie by dragging her androgynous, deeply confused adolescent son (Zane Pais) along for an ill-advised reunion with her estranged sister (Jennifer Jason Leigh). For one cringe-inducing scene after another, we're waiting for Margot's self-righteous bubble to finally burst, and yet she somehow manages to say exactly the wrong thing and make a bad situation infinitely worse. Gratingly unpleasant yet often hilarious, writer-director Noah Baumbach's follow up to his 2005 I-hate-my-dad hit The Squid and the Whale again mines the grim comedy of embarrassment, as it cuts in and out of scenes at unexpected moments with a jittery, hand-held camera that's always zoomed in a little too close for comfort. In other words, the movie would probably be unwatchable if it weren't so damn funny. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Michael Clayton ★★★½ Another whip-smart, politically savvy flick from star/executive producer George Clooney, who cements his status as a throwback to the age of heavyweight leading men with enough gravitas to handle flawed, complicated leading roles. Clooney's title character, a burnt-out fixer for a big-money Manhattan law firm, finds himself growing a conscience after witnessing the shabby treatment of his esteemed colleague (the great Tom Wilkinson) when the latter threatens to blow a billion-dollar lawsuit over a carcinogenic weed-killer. Shot primarily in metallic shades of gray by cinematographer Robert Elswit, Bourne-trilogy screenwriter Tony Gilroy's impressively lean directorial debut has little patience for soft-hearted pieties or conventional modern uplift. The kind of stark, paranoid star vehicle that probably would have been a summer blockbuster back in the early '70s, Michael Clayton oozes class and adult sophistication. Clooney carries the picture on his weary shoulders, subtle glimmers of long-buried idealism slowly dawning behind his downcast eyes. The picture's stirring climax isn't physical but instead a verbal boxing match that's more exciting than most shoot-outs. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Mist ★½ Professional Stephen King–adapter Frank Darabont is every author's dream—he never reads a page he feels like cutting. After his over-praised and overlong cinematic transcriptions of The Shawshank Redemption and The Green Mile, Darabont set his sights smaller with a slender King novella, one that the filmmaker somehow still managed to drag out for over two hours. Thomas Jane leads a TV-level cast trapped in a supermarket as a supernatural mist obscures the shenanigans of various silly-looking monsters outside. Clumsily groping at 9/11 parallels, the filmmaker apparently never figured out that the cool thing about subversive subtext in '50s monster movies isn't the actual text. Here everybody stands around explaining the allegorical importance of what we're watching. Then comes Darabont's new and improved ending, a depressing and nihilistic finale that prompted King himself to issue a press release saying "anyone who gives it away should be hung from the neck until dead." Funny, I could say the same about whoever came up with such a foul twist. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Mr. Magorium's Wonder Emporium ★ Delivering the kind of confident, extravagantly awful performance that perhaps only a genius would even dare, Dustin Hoffman shrieks and sputters his way through this horrific, bargain-basement Willy Wonka rip-off, which is also the directorial debut from hotshot screenwriter Zack Helm. As a 234-year-old toy maker who appears to have suffered a debilitating stroke, Hoffman putters around a cluttered junk shop, sharing the screen with bad special effects and imparting fortune-cookie wisdom regarding magic and wonder. As his faithful assistant suffering a quarter-life crisis, Natalie Portman vapidly hangs her mouth open while the talky and misguided scenario veers into some bizarre meditation on the inevitability of death. As with Helm's script for Stranger Than Fiction, Magorium follows no internal logic and confounds the viewer at every maudlin turn. Boasting some of the ugliest production design you'll see all year, this eyesore of a movie looks garish, tacky and cheap. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

No Country for Old Men ★★★★ Adapted from the 2005 novel by Cormac McCarthy, Joel and Ethan Coen's No Country for Old Men is an enthralling, devastating movie experience. Stripped to the bone, it's a model of ruthless narrative efficiency that blossoms into something much larger than the sum of its precision-tooled parts. What at first seems like the simple saga of two tough hombres and a bag of money eventually attains a mythic, almost Biblical grandeur. For days afterwards, it haunts your dreams—the bad ones. The Coens have at last gone back to their roots, infusing No Country with the clockwork meticulousness and parched landscapes of their killer 1984 debut, Blood Simple. The movie is almost unbearably suspenseful and boasts the filmmakers' trademark strain of sicko gallows humor. But there's also something new here: a palpable sense of sorrow and genuine emotional resonance. For the first time in their brilliant career, it finally feels like the merry pranksters are out to do more than crack themselves up. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Romance and Cigarettes ★★ Lost in distribution limbo after a shaky 2005 festival premiere, writer-director John Turturro's erratic karaoke raunch-fest is currently being schlepped from theater to theater at the personal expense of the filmmaker himself, so at least you know that Transformers paycheck went to a noble cause. Unfortunately, this audacious effort falls freakishly flat. James Gandolfini stars as a horn-dog Queens construction worker with a song in his heart and a hankering for Kate Winslet's potty-mouthed lingerie shopgirl. Too bad his wife (Susan Sarandon) finds one of their smutty love poems in the laundry. Periodically bursting into songs by Englebert Humperdinck, Tom Jones and even Bruce Springsteen, Romance's cast gamely tries to navigate abrupt tonal shifts, awkwardly staged musical numbers and some breathtakingly profane monologues that sound more like John Cassavetes by way of The Aristocrats. Turturro's obviously got grand ambitions here, but he lacks the cinematic skill to anchor the picture convincingly. Winslet conjures some genuine pathos despite her porn-star dialogue, but the rest feels like a vanity project run amok. (At Kendall Square.)

Southland Tales ★ Every bit as awful as you've probably already heard, one-time wunderkind Richard Kelly's long-delayed, epically troubled follow-up to the emo cult fave Donnie Darko tosses two-and-a-half hours of half-formed satire, empty political signifiers, convoluted sci-fi mythology and adolescent sex jokes up against the screen, lamely hoping something will stick. Nothing does. Dwayne "the Rock" Johnson stars as a right-wing action hero suffering from amnesia who meets a group of underground Marxist guerillas improbably fronted by SNL alums like Cheri Oteri, Jon Lovitz, Nora Dunn and Amy Poehler, alongside Kevin Smith, Booger from Revenge of the Nerds and Wallace Shawn wearing Kabuki makeup. There's much ado about the impending apocalypse and exactly one good scene—Justin Timberlake as a disfigured Fallujah vet who lip-synchs a Killers song in a bowling alley. It has nothing to do with anything else in the movie, but at least it's more entertaining than watching the rest of these cartoonish grotesques mugging for the camera and shouting gibberish over one another. (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

2 Days in Paris ★★★ The enchanting Julie Delpy makes her directorial debut and stars in this very funny, if slightly uneven, culture-clash farce that follows a bickering young couple's strained 48 hours in the City of Light. Just don't expect the dreamy romanticism of the similarly structured Delpy vehicle Before Sunset, as here she and real-life ex Adam Goldberg mine all sorts of awkward and uncomfortable comedic scenarios that present Paris as swarming with psycho cabdrivers, elderly nymphomaniacs and sleazy former lovers lurking around every corner. A muscled, tattooed Goldberg borrows Woody Allen's timing and delivery as he plays a jittery hypochondriac aghast at the parade of exes Delpy's loopy photographer keeps bumping into. Surprisingly enough, 2 Days in Paris sports almost as many penis jokes as Superbad, as well as the inspired use of an arsonist, vegan guardian angel. Delpy's use of handheld cameras and jump cuts pay cheeky homage to the French New Wave, but occasionally the filmmaking becomes so frazzled you wish she'd back off just a bit. (In the suburbs.)

SIBLING SCRAMBLE

The Fiery Furnaces play Dec. 10 at Great Scott.

Amy Giunta

FEW INDIE-ROCK BANDS are as intricately eccentric as the Fiery Furnaces. The brother-sister tandem of Matthew and Eleanor Friedberger burns through brash musical shifts and lyrical fancies that can prove either fabulous or frustrating, depending on the listener's tolerance for such omnivorous artists.

But if the outside world views the Furnaces' work as unusual and complex, it's apparently much more matter-of-fact to multi-instrumentalist Matthew Friedberger, 35, who writes both the music and lyrics, and makes all the sounds on record except for Eleanor's vocals and Robert D'Amico's drums.

"I try to do the job, so to speak," says Friedberger, who draws attention to the Beatles' adventurously dense side (and similarly loops his own backwards vocals). "My songs are meant to more often be imitations of 'Happiness is a Warm Gun' than imitations of 'Sexy Sadie.' Not to compare my songs to those masterpieces. But that's what I like."

In turn, for other musical influences, Friedberger cites not esoteric fare, but "all the famous and well-respected rock" records released before 1981 by groups including the Doors, Earth, Wind & Fire and the Who, whose mini-opera Rael is a favorite. "After 1981," he adds, "we like records by the Fall."

He and Eleanor, 31, grew up in the Chicago suburb of Oak Park, then separately migrated to Brooklyn and began making music. "We both have the same sort of taste in music," Friedberger says by e-mail from a tour stop in Hamburg, Germany. "And we are both very, very negative and full of disdain, you know. Concerning some things. But very positive and friendly as well. Concerning others."

In turn, the push and pull of the group's abstract lyrics—sung in Eleanor's adaptable but direct delivery—show no correlation to Oak Park or Brooklyn. It would be hard to find a band since the heyday of Pavement that mixes such lyrical concepts as Egyptian grammar, Navajo basketball coaches and blonde ladies, duplexes of the dead and a character study that revolves around Japanese slippers—all of which are found on Widow City, the prolific Furnaces' sixth disc since 2003.

They mix lyrical concepts like

Egyptian grammar, Navajo basketball coaches and blonde ladies, duplexes of the dead and character studies revolving around Japanese slippers.

"I don't know what the hell other people imagine their terrible rock lyrics are meant to be or be about, but the sort of things you mention are the sorts of things Eleanor and I think are appropriate to the sort of records we've made so far," says Friedberger, musing, "We have to decide what the next record will be. Now it seems it will be a soul-funk album. Called Calamite Corner."

Of course Friedberger might be extra punchy during a European tour in which, he reports, "the axle fell off the rear of the van." Still, he adds that the tour was going "very well."

The Furnaces are back on the road with drummer D'Amico and ex-Sebadoh bassist Jason Loewenstein. Friedberger mainly mans keyboards, though not the Chamberlin he employed to reproduce strings, woodwinds and brass on Widow City, which breaks beyond 2006's synthesizer-iced Bitter Tea with juxtapositions that evoke prog-rock and parlor pop, punk fusion and fairytale puzzles.

"The Chamberlin is the American Mellotron," says Friedberger, whose Widow City arsenal also included that other primitive sampling keyboard, made famous by British groups like the Moody Blues and Genesis. "They are too fragile and expensive to bring on tour."

But rearranging live instrumentation is nothing new for the Fiery Furnaces (named after a Biblical term referenced in the 1968 film Chitty Chitty Bang Bang). Fans can still expect many of the songs from Widow City, and even some tunes from Rehearsing My Choir, an ultra-peculiar 2005 project on which the Friedbergers enlisted their grandmother for spoken-word narratives that reflect her life story. In concert, the Furnaces sometimes throw extra curves by scrambling their songs in monstrous medleys.

"Why stop between songs?" poses Friedberger. "Why not change the songs around? To play the songs as they are on the record isn't very nice. You have to give the people something new at all times." ✖✖✖

Banding Together

Unquiet Riot Despite what you may think, Ra Ra Riot isn't the name of a Vin Diesel movie. With a punky mix of drums, guitars, keyboard and strings, the band's received serious acclaim from the likes of Billboard. On Dec. 15, they're at the Middle East to play a benefit show in honor of the band's late drummer, with proceeds buying musical instruments for underprivileged kids.

Origami—Not Just for Airplanes Anymore

Beware of Paper Cuts

Fear not, Grasshopper; the interactive Origami Now! exhibition will bring you to paper-folding enlightenment. The Peabody Essex Museum presents this educational showcase of the world's most innovative works through June 8. From portraits to piglets, insects to armadillos, these creased creations are sure to bring out the origamist in all of us. Paper cranes? Psh! They got nothing on the newest origami, like the pseudo-insect katydid shown below by artist Brian Chan. Band-Aids not included.

Rockie Horoscope {ROCKIE GARDINER}

JUMPING JUPITER!

[NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21, 2007]
You've been told all year long that 2007 is your year. Well, not only is "your year" almost over, the opportunities that have been—or shoulda, coulda, woulda been—knocking on your door are about to end as well. On Dec. 18, your expansive Jupiter ruler abandons Sagittarius, not to return for another 12 years. Of course, having the planet that bestows wealth and good fortune in your Capricorn money house for the next 12 months might not be a tragedy, especially if something huge happens during the cosmic coupling Dec. 11.

CAPRICORN [December 22–January 20]
Jot down your dreams; they may be telling you something you need to know. While prescient Jupiter finishes up its yearlong transit through your Sagittarius 12th house, the place your unconscious calls home, you could get a clearer picture of what 2008 will bring. Despite all the holiday parties, try to spend some time alone meditating, daydreaming or simply napping. And while you may treasure all of your friends, you'd be wise not to listen to what a few are saying. Or, more to the point, boasting about.

AQUARIUS [January 21–February 18]
Once again it's your independent Uranus ruler that's setting the tone, as unpredictable as it might be, for the holidays. You'll get a taste ot the wildness and weirdness to come around on Dec. 6 as the sun tests Uranus' proclivity for creating shock waves. If you find yourself ordering bizarre novelty items online to give as Christmas presents, attribute that behavior to Uranus occupying your Pisces money house. However, the upside to all this astrological action is the attention being paid to you and your wish list.

PISCES [February 19–March 19]
Your prospects for a happy holiday season should improve as soon as affectionate Venus enters sexy Scorpio, another simpatico water sign, on Dec. 5. With one small change in the heavens balancing out whatever surprise erotic Uranus in your sign is creating, a Fish can feel that your sense of well-being has been restored. Add retrograde Mars mellowing out in your Cancer house of romance and recreation, and you've got the makings of a blockbuster sexual encounter waiting to dominate your life in another week. Patience.

ARIES [March 20–April 19]
You won't be doing as much wishful thinking about your future as thoughtful planning. While the spirited Sagittarius sun brings your lifelong aspirations back into focus, even an impulsive Aries may spend quality time evaluating what he or she has yet to experience. So don't be surprised if you figure out how and when you can finally visit your own Shangri-la. Until the winter solstice blows in, Rams, especially those born in mid-April, are in an excellent position to achieve whatever they bloody well want.

TAURUS [April 20–May 20]
While it might not be a graceful segue as your Venus ruler moves from sociable Libra to your Scorpio marriage house, you could become even more possessive than you are at this very moment. Don't think that's possible? Wait and see what happens mid-month when you're torn between being more attentive to an attractive partner or getting richer. The heady aroma exuded by money and power is particularly intoxicating this holiday season, which is why you shouldn't leave a vulnerable mate unprotected.

GEMINI [May 21–June 20]
The power lies with the partner. How close to the power source you get depends in part on how shaky things are with the people your significant other works with or the authorities who are supposed to be in charge. This week the disruptive sun-Uranus square could test your partner's response to swiftly changing circumstances. If asked, you would gladly help; however, if you volunteer, you're likely to be rebuffed. It's a matter of who will maintain control during a crisis, even if the chaos is confined to the kitchen.

CANCER [June 21–July 22]
Let's assume that Venus' foray into your Scorpio house of romance and risk will attract some pretty interesting offers. What a Moon Child does with them depends on how the freewheeling Sagittarius new moon on Dec. 9 will affect you. To find out, you should probably wait until affectionate Venus forms a favorable connection to horny Mars in your sign on Dec. 11. However, that's also the day that a powerful astrological event, the merger of Jupiter and Pluto at the Galactic Center of the Milky Way, takes place. Major distraction.

LEO [July 23–August 22]
Although it may seem like you're in control, while your sun ruler is frolicking in your Sagittarius house of pleasurable pastimes, things could easily get out of hand—especially around Dec. 6, when the sun heads toward a challenging encounter with erratic Uranus in Pisces, the sign with no boundaries. Should you wind up in hot water, it'll help to have an excuse on hand, e.g., a compliant companion or a doctor's note, to bail with. Nonetheless, the urge to see just how far out there you can get might be too tempting to resist.

VIRGO [August 23–September 22]
Out of the frying pan and into the fire. Such is the Sagittarius saga, a story line you've been hooked on ever since unpredictable Uranus entered your Pisces partnership house in March 2003. It's one thing when the Virgo sun tests your ability to handle whatever a nutty partner has in mind for your birthday. But the conflict engendered by the Sag sun involves everyone in your household and takes place anytime between Thanksgiving and Christmas. Since there's bound to be heated discussions and power plays, try to chill.

LIBRA [September 23–October 22]
The party, as you've come to know and love it, is over once your Venus ruler leaves your sign on Dec. 5. While the goddess descends into the lower depths ruled by the Scorpion, a sweet, above-board Libra may find that you're spending a lot more time figuring out how to get people to give you what you secretly crave. That is, after you find out what it is you secretly crave. Don't be surprised if that turns out to be a meeting with a wise and powerful wizard or mega mogul. Who knew you were this ambitious?

SCORPIO [October 23–November 21]
It's your month for hauling in the big money. And this year, because gigantic Jupiter is merging with your plutocratic Pluto coruler, the haul should be huge, or at least bigger than before. It's possible that your love life might suffer in the transaction; that is, if you have one. But if you don't, then the result of the Sag sun questioning the boundaries rebellious Uranus insists upon breaking through might create a situation you're totally unprepared for. This is why office parties are so dangerous.

We salute Boston's finest restaurants and clubs

RESTAURANTS

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142 www.irishconnection.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and the elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features creative, comfort cuisine. On weekends, Chef Michael McEwen turns out "late-night" cuisine until 1:30 a.m., featuring midnight snacks of fritto misto, baked fondue and pancakes and eggs from the brunch menu. Brownstone is open seven days a week from 11 a.m. – 2 a.m., serving brunch on Saturday and Sunday from 10 a.m. – 3 p.m.

COOGAN'S [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415. www.irishconnection.com] Established in 1996, Coogan's is a cozy pub located in the heart of Boston's financial district. It's the perfect place to enjoy hearty pasta dishes, fresh seafood or the aged Black Angus cuts of beef. Wash it down with your pick of one of our 20 draught beers. Enjoy the view of the street side from the bay windows, the warmth of the fireplace or cozy up in a booth with friends. After dark, Coogan's heats up, with DJ's playing top 40.

FUGAKYU [1280 Beacon Street (Coolidge Corner), Brookline, MA 02446, 617-734-1268. www.fugakyu] net. Authentic Japanese cuisine in an elegant and serene setting. Open Daily for lunch and dinner, Fugakyu's menu consists of traditional and nouveau Japanese cuisine including sushi, sashimi, tempura and an extensive sake list. Fugakyu is the largest Japanese restaurant in New England. It's two floors include a sushi bar, cocktail bar, common dining areas, bamboo-enclosed booths, screened Tatami rooms and several private function rooms. Reservations for parties of all sizes are accepted. Takeout and delivery available.

MATCH [94 Massachusetts Ave., at Newbury Street, Boston, 617-247-9922] This modern restaurant/ lounge maintains an unpretentious yet hip vibe. A sleek fire display and glass wine room are just two of its many features. Match's signature mini burgers and martinis are guaranteed to please the most discriminating palate. Match music has a distinct early evening lounge feel with the beat and volume picking up as the night progresses. Open daily 5pm-1am. AE, DC, MC,V.

M.J. O'CONNOR'S [27 Columbus Ave., at Park Plaza, Boston 617-482-2255 www.mjocconors. com] Eclectic Irish Food and spirits, a warm friendly staff and beautifully handcrafted woodwork and murals make this authentic upscale Irish pub one of Boston's best. Starting with only the finest ingredients, each dish is slow cooked according to recipes that have been used for generations. If you're looking for a respite from the hustle and bustle of the city, M.J. O'Connor's is a comfortable and welcoming environment to enjoy a delicious meal, have a pint and some great conversation. Open 11am - 2am 7 days a week.

The Sunset Grill features 27 beers on tap!

Turn Japanese at Fugakyu

NED DEVINE'S FANEUIL HALL MARKETPLACE [Quincy Market Building, Boston 617-248-8800 www.neddevineboston. com] Located in historic Faneuil Hall Marketplace's Quincy Market Building, Ned Devine's is an upscale Irish Pub concept which features hearty Irish specialties and contemporary American cuisine. Whether it's an afternoon business meeting, dinner with family or after work social gathering, Ned's is a warm meeting spot to enjoy conversation and a wonderful meal. Hand painted murals, imported Irish woodwork, original brickwork and ambient lighting create a comfortable atmosphere in the heart of downtown Boston. Open 11am - 2am, 7 days a week.

ROGGIE'S NEW AGE BREW & GRILLE [356 Chestnut Hill Avenue, Cleveland Circle, Brighton, 617-566-1880. www.roggies.com] This all time favorite restaurant and bar has over 52 beers on tap. Yes, but Can They Do Dishes?

Imagine Benihana opening at the Cyclorama and run by preteens, and you'll get a feel for the 10th anniversary party for Kids Can Cook.

A program that teaches inner-city kids, ages 4–14, everything from kitchen skills to proper nutrition, Kids Can Cook was founded by catering mogul Dan Mathieu and luxury retailing doyenne Donna Montgomery. Both were honored, while past and present participants of the program prepared family-style dinners tableside. On hand for the festivities: first lady Diane Patrick, cochairs Susan and Bill Poduska, Linda and Joe Matzkin, and Shelly and Ofer Nemirovsky, Suki Forbes Bigham and fashion avatar/recent Boston transplant Michael Leva with his other half, Jonathan, who said, "I went into Prada and the sales staff was so aggressive I felt like I needed body armor."

However, the evening's snarkiest remark came when a guest said to a volunteer who was selling raffle tickets in the form of cookies, "I already bought one, and I have to say that 250 bucks is a hell of an expensive cookie."

Eat Now, for Tomorrow We Diet...

Dan Mathieu and Donna Montgomery at Kids Can Cook

Some of the best chefs in Cambridge—among them Jody Adams of Rialto, Dante de Magistris of Dante and Paul O'Connell of Chez Henri—served up tender vittles to the likes of lovely lab mistress Petra Loesch of MGH, bodacious business consultant Holly Drumm Zhang, and Greek Adonis and accountant Christos Kyriakis.

At one table, bartenders made cocktails using Veuve Clicquot and a choice of blueberries or apple cider, while another table dished out coffee and ice cream, and a jazz band played, prompting one guest to make the possibly wishful-thinking double entendre: "It's always that way; the littlest guy has the biggest instrument."

However, the most amusing remark came from the woman who was approached by a waitress with a tray of hors d'oeuvres and said, "No thanks. The butt stops here."

Centerfolds Is Certainly Cheaper...

Seeing museum-quality artwork for sale brings out the inner Isabella Stewart Gardner in us, which is why we found ourselves wishing we had unlimited funds to buy everything at the gala preview for the annual Boston International Fine Art Show, a fundraiser for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, held at the Cyclorama.

Among the collectors and enthusiasts present: Rosalie Cohen and Roberta Pasternak, Beacon Hellions Jim Moses and Philip Lovejoy, the aptly named Swing Robertson, Russian oligarch Sasha Peselman and the gorgeous, pregnant Diana, Boys and Girls Clubs cutie Jill Goldweitz, ruby-throated radio personality Ron Della Chiesa and his enchantress Joyce, redheaded party girl Marion Kassler and others of an equally art-loving ilk.

Among the evening's funniest remarks: One well-known and formidable woman said to a friend who was contemplating buying a $58,000 nude, "That's an expensive piece of ass."

Matthew Lishansky and Augusto Lino at Flavors of Fall

Ashley Collett in her cupcake-paper dress at Une Soirée à Versailles

Sacre Temps...

It was a time-warp back to the salad days of Marie Antoinette when the French Library & Alliance Française hosted Une Soirée à Versailles in the appropriately rococo ballroom of the Taj.

Guests dressed as 18th-century French nobles mixed with those who opted for black-tie, and among the throng were committee chairs Tracy and Brad Curley and Elaine Heppworth, honorary chairs Suki and Miguel de Braganca with daughters Annabel and Camilla, art dealer Andrea Marquit Clagett and her husband, Gordon, latter-day Madame DuBarry Vanessa Uzan, stunning emcee Sara Underwood (who gamely spoke French in front of some pained-looking native speakers) and real-life Scarlett O'Hara Wendy Franco Almquist, whose costume consisted of a velvet curtain, a secondhand dress and a Christmas wreath in her hair, but who was clever enough to stop in at Chanel and have them do her makeup.

Elysa Dunster at Une Soirée à Versailles

The Let Them Eat Cake Prize went to the woman whose idea of dressing in costume is to drag out all her diamonds, and whose conversational nuggets included, "It's purely accidental that all four of my husbands were rich." ✖✖✖

Komfort PETS

Climate-Controlled Pet Carrier

In the heat or cold your pet will enjoy the ultimate in comfort

■ The revolutionary Komfort Pets Carrier is the world's first climate-controlled pet carrier designed to automatically keep pets cool when it's too hot and keep them warm when it's too cold.

Komfort Pets has pioneered a patent-pending technology to offer both heating and cooling capabilities for your pet's comfort. Our temperature control system is designed to complement the natural methods by which a pet regulates its own body temperature by using both conduction and convection simultaneously. We have incorporated this ingenious technology into the best-looking and most distinctive pet carrier in the marketplace today.

The Komfort Pets Carrier can be taken or used almost anywhere. It is surprisingly affordable and can be used in cars, SUVs, RVs, rental cars, boats, or in your home or garage. The Komfort Pets Carrier can be customized for police and military applications, and is available with an interlocking stackable top for the show dog circuit and other uses.

"At J. Lohr, We Focus on Flavor from Vineyard to Bottle."

Jerry Lohr, Owner/President

Steve Carter, Vineyard Manager

FLAVOR SECOND TO NONE

That's the focus at J. Lohr. Sounds so simple, yet it's surprisingly complex. Unrivaled flavor demands total control, every step of the way. That's why Jerry Lohr carefully selected new French clones of Merlot planted on rootstock that are ideally suited to the limestone and clay soils of his estate vineyards in Paso Robles. One of California's premier red wine appellations, the region's warm days and cool nights yield grapes with deep and concentrated fruit flavors. Longtime Vineyard Manager Steve Carter nurtures these vineyards to optimize deep currant and cherry flavors inherent to the Merlot grape. That's how J. Lohr achieves flavor second to none.

Taste for yourself.

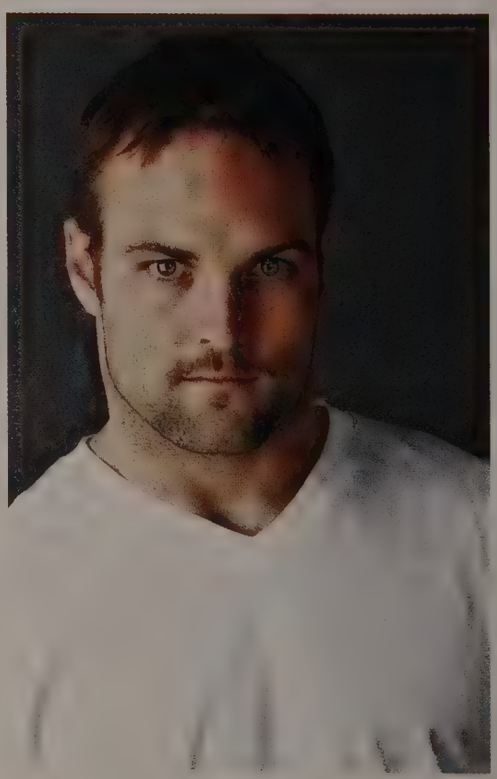
Season's Eatings

"Be a friend maker, not a friend breaker." That was my signature resolution, written in cursive each December on an index card. In my family, no child passed from one year to the next without committing promises for a better self to print. The reward was a festive dinner of buttery lobsters and lemony artichokes.

Not much has changed since then. I still make resolutions, and food is a central part of my annual rites. As in my younger days, several of us have committed our promises to print in the magazine. Amanda Knorr has vowed to keep her desk clean, for example, while Andrew Rimas pledges to lose 10 pounds.



He might consider a healthy fast food diet. The approach worked for Rich Levine, who abandoned his bad eating habits for a week of B.good and KnowFat Lifestyle Grille. Check out his diary this issue, and then forget about calories and carbs. Chef Barbara Lynch provides recipes for a holiday dinner that includes white chocolate soup.

However you celebrate, I wish you a fun, friend-filled New Year's Eve. See you in 2008!

POLAR BARES

It takes a rarified sense of fun to jump into Dorchester Bay in January. But the L Street Brownies—America's oldest polar bear club—have been swimming in near-freezing temperatures since 1865. Not personally, of course.

"I've been winter swimming for over 20 years," says Jack Dever, 68, president of the Brownies (who were named for the year-round tans sported by the members). "It releases the endorphins, so you get a buzz. The sea minerals are good for the skin. And it lowers the blood pressure."

Every January, the Brownies attract a crowd of hundreds (not to mention international camera crews) for their New Year's Day swim behind South Boston's venerable L Street Bathhouse. Individual Brownies venture into the water throughout the year, carrying shovels to break the ice if necessary. "I've got a place in Fort Lauderdale," laughs Dever. "The ambience is a little bit different."

WHERE'S THE BEEF? In the Franklin's meatloaf, turkey is king.

Good Eats

Go Dark

Even after Thanksgiving, Franklin Café loyalists call the South End institution—their fingers crossed—to see if their favorite turkey dish has reappeared on the menu. Sure, everyone swoons over the trimmings: the mound of buttery chive-smashed spuds, the spice-scented gravy and the rough-chopped garnish of dried Turkish figs. But to perk up his poultry rendition of this comfort fare classic, executive chef Brian Reyelt's digs deep into the dark side—of the turkey, that is. Along with fresh breadcrumbs and dried cranberries, it's the leg and thigh meat that pack the high-tone flavor, the succulent texture—and, for that matter, the whole house at 278 Shawmut. ELIZABETH BOMZE

Do the Splits

What's cuter than a half bottle of wine? Holiday season is the perfect time to bestow a so-called split upon your loved one, enabling you to appear oh-so-sophisticated ("But darling, of course, a full bottle would never have fit in the stocking!") while indulging your deepest cheapskate tendencies. The problem is, very few wines are available in this mini-size. Here are some recommendations:

MOET & CHANDON
"White Star" NV Champagne (Martignetti's, $23.99)
White Star's not only the best-selling champagne marque in the United States; it's also one of the most delicious. With a lemon-vanilla aroma and precise pinpoint bubbles, the flavors tend toward citrus, but with a touch of sweetness. The finish is dry and bracing. Include a tin of caviar in the stocking or, more romantic, a pair of crystal flutes.

LOUIS JADOT
Pouilly-Fuissé, Burgundy, 2006 (Marty's, $13)
Jadot is always reliable and this best seller is understated, with mineral and earthy aromatic accents that underscore the tart, green apple flavors. An ideal choice as an aperitif or to accompany fresh scallops, the wine is broad-textured and bone-dry. It's an antidote for those who complain that chardonnay is dull, over-oaked and tropical.

MICHELE CHIARLO
Moscato d'Asti "Nivole," Piedmont, 2006 (Bauer Wine, $12.99)
This popular favorite is a little bit of everything: modest in alcohol (5.5 percent), slightly sweet, just barely sparkling. The Italians call it "frizzante." And the package is a lively burst of sunshine that will brighten up a table. You can serve this lusciously perfumed wine with prosciutto and cheese, melon and apricots, pumpkin ravioli, or as a great brunch starter.

KENWOOD
"Jack London" Cabernet Sauvignon, Sonoma, 2003 (Bauer Wine, $16.99)
This single-vineyard bottling is classic Sonoma Mountain: herb-accented, savory, with blackberry flavors and a soft, moderately tannic finish. Matured for two years, it has the added benefit of being able to age and develop. If you want to encourage immediate consumption, throw some young Gruyère in the stocking.

Master of Wine Sandy Block, vice president of beverage operations for Legal Sea Foods

LOCAL YOLKEL Brunch just got a whole lot better in East Boston.

BLUE LINE SPECIAL

The path from new small business to neighborhood cornerstone isn't simply marched. You need karma—and having a higher purpose than soup slinging surely helps.

"Our goal is to serve as a catalyst for other small businesses in East Boston," says 303 Café co-owner Melinda Jones, 40. "A lot of people don't know where East Boston is. We want to open their eyes."

When Jones and her husband, Tom Clackett, 33, bought the space, the tin roof was rusted, and a tree was growing through what's now the kitchen window. But the couple clawed their way to a Sept. 13 opening. Clackett refinished the interior, making every effort to recycle available materials, while Jones, a nurse practitioner, took extra jobs.

The result is a home-spun café that's both an eating and a meeting place. "We've got vegan items, vegetarian, empanadas, tufo saag, sushi. . ." Jones reels off a long list. "We show local art and have local meetings. I think people feel proud that someone built something like this in the neighborhood."

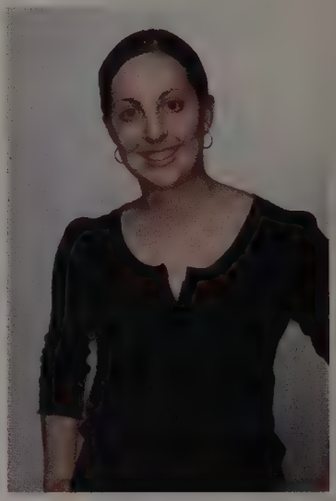
IMPROPER RESOLVES

While our New Year's hangovers evaporate over the first Bloody Marys of 2008, it's time to start dreaming of a healthier, less woozy future. Time to start fresh. Time to make foolish, untenable promises to ourselves, our loved ones and our financial creditors. So in the spirit of optimism, some of The Improper's editorial staff are taking their New Year's resolutions public. In two months, we'll revisit the crew and, in the crucible of a snarky magazine article, see who triumphed, who lagged and who fell flat at the starting post. We'd like to hear your New Year's resolution stories, too. Send them to impersonals@improper.com, and we might print them alongside our own tales of personal fortitude and disgrace.

ANDREW RIMAS



These are the ways we're going to better ourselves:

Nick Altschuller
vows to read Anna Karenina and Moby Dick.

Amanda Knorr
resolves to keep her desk clean.

Megan Lisagor
pledges to work on her book every Sunday.

Rich Levine wants to stop dipping.

Katie Noble
promises to blow-dry her hair every morning.

Andrew Rimas
plans to lose 10 pounds by any means within the law.

Our trials begin Jan. 1. We'll follow up in March. Wish us luck.

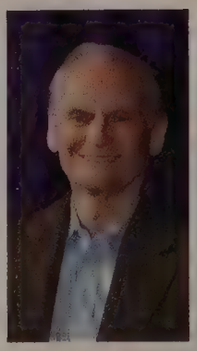
SNOT NICE

SAY SOMETHING AFTER I SNEEZE, please. It's getting to be flu season, and there is one thing that bothers me more than the dozen boxes of tissues I have to buy, the Robitussin and the antibacterial wash. What I hate, what I loathe, what I just really can't understand are people who don't say, "God bless you," after I sneeze. I was on the T the other day and sneezed, and no one said ANYTHING. I know you heard it. The chance of someone being friendly on the T is less than Mickey Mouse becoming the president tomorrow, but isn't it common decency? Let's not even bring God into this. Just say, "Bless you." It might be a nice change of pace from saying, "F you."

Raging Sneezer

To the homeless woman who stole my cell phone:

Admittedly I was pretty drunk when I went to get a late-night snack at the gas station. Remembering a few minutes later that I left my cell phone on the counter, I went back, only to find it missing. So then I called it, and you answered and said that you were holding it hostage for $5. You probably could've gotten more out of me. I just wanted to thank you for giving it back. It was a good call.



Short Changed

To the parking-spot stealer at South Shore Plaza the day after Thanksgiving:

My friends and I had been patiently waiting for a parking spot for at least 15 minutes. The parking lot was packed, but we were in a great mood, due to great Thanksgivings and the big shopping deals we were excited to get. You, in your big-ass, gas-guzzling Lexus, sped up and dangerously turned, almost hitting the car that was trying to pull out and stealing the spot we had spent 15 minutes waiting for. We were irate and waited to discuss the issue with you, hoping that you would be adult enough to admit that you were 7 years old and that the spot was, in fact, ours. Instead you pretended not to see us. You got out of your car and held your double chin high, and we just steamed and waited for another spot. We did get the last laugh, however, when we keyed your car. Just don't mess with us the day after Christmas.

CARL N. MORRIS
HARVARD STATISTICS PROFESSOR

ASK THE EXPERT

Q: WHAT ARE THE CHANCES OF THREE SPORTS CHAMPIONSHIPS?

As of today (Dec. 10) and for some weeks now, the Red Sox, Patriots and Celtics all have the best (and unshared) win/loss records in their leagues. With 30, 32 and 30 teams in these leagues, that combination has only one chance in 28,800.

The Red Sox responded to their Oct. 16 playoff loss by sweeping seven games to win the World Series. Also since Oct. 16, the Patriots have been 7-0, and the Celtics stand at 17-2. That's an amazing 31-2 record in three sports for the eight weeks since Oct. 16. How amazing? If 33 games were decided by coin flips, 31 or more wins would have one chance in 15 million.

But will Boston win consecutive MLB, NFL and NBA championships? This trifecta has never happened. The 13-0 Patriots now have a 50-50 chance of a perfect 19-0 season. With a slightly better than 50-50 chance of a Patriot Super Bowl, with the already banked Red Sox World Series and with the Celtics now listed among the NBA's elite teams, Boston's chance for the first-ever championship trifecta exceeds 10 percent.

Whatever happens next, we have already witnessed historic levels of concurrent excellence in baseball, football and basketball.

JUST ASKING

Improper Bostonian: Hey, I saw an ad on the T this morning that said, "Call us today and stop paying rent by Thanksgiving."

Teller: Right.

Right, so I'd love to get involved with you guys, but obviously I'd need to get reimbursed for the rent I've paid since Turkey Day. Can we make that happen?

[Long pause.] Um... no. Are you interested in buying something?

Of course, I just want to make sure I can get that money back.

How much is your rent?

About $1,800.

Well, you could probably stop paying your rent by January.

Oh, so is the deal now, "Call us today and stop paying rent by New Year's?"

Guess we need to update that ad. [Click.]

PRECIOUS GEMS

Jewel tones shone as the darlings of the runways this season. Ruby reds, emerald greens, glittering golds, electric blues, deep purples and velvety violets were all prominent. While you may blanch at the thought of such statement-making shades for the office, they offer perfect party looks. Boston boutiques are rich in gemstone-colored satins, silks and sequins in more than a few silhouettes, including these six styles. Remember, such opulence calls for simple shoes (the higher the better). MARNI ELYSE KATZ

GET HOTTIE

When it's cold out, how do you get your guy to wear a hat and scarf without sounding like his mother? Tell him he looks hot in it. And in case they haven't already met, introduce him to his new best friend: cashmere. Theory's soft and chic line of men's winter accessories—including the Arnold cashmere hat in dark-gray mélange ($125) and Denny cashmere scarf in black ($265)—should make this a smooth transition. Just don't pinch his cheeks with delight.

Beauty

Just Plummy Lips, lashes, lids and nails received the royal (purple) treatment on winter runways. A plethora of plums and violets figured prominently in beauty palettes for day and night. For tips on the end-of-year style, we queried Rebecca Pimentel, proprietor of the Beauty Mark in Beacon Hill. Pimentel put forth DuWop Lash Lacquer in plum ($19) for soft and subtle lashes. For nails, she suggests layering Siberian Nights by OPI ($12), a wintry shade of onyx from their Russian Collection, with Whatever Lola Wants by Lippmann Collection ($18), a sheer lavender with shimmer.

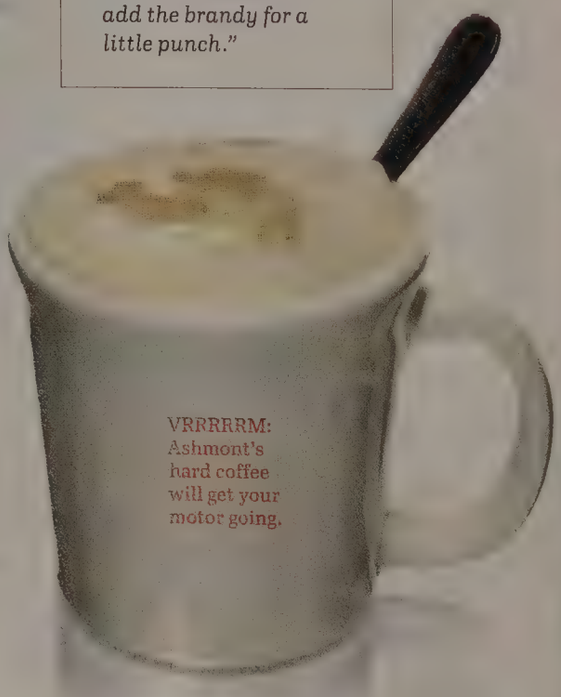
Drink of the Moment

Engine Revver



To fight the winter weather, put some fire in your belly.

Bar manager Tara O'Riordan puts it simply: "If you don't like it, I'll drink it." The Ashmont Grill's Engine 18 is a mix of brandy, Kahlúa, Godiva White Chocolate Liqueur, fresh coffee and homemade whipped cream. It's the grill's salute to the firefighters stationed across the way in Peabody Square. "They're great neighbors, they come in and chat," O'Riordan says. "This is a little way to pay homage to them." Like Jennifer Jason Leigh in Backdraft, the Engine 18 is hot and not as sweet as it looks. Sips begin creamy, but as that whipped cap tilts back, a flood of hot brandy extinguishes the rich chocolatyness, leaving the palette clean for another swig. NICK ALTSCHULLER

Colorful creations and stories for Christmas

Have Yourself an Arty Xmas

RINGINGLY COLORFUL CREATIONS of the highest quality and originality abound at the Cambridge Artists Cooperative, as if the spirit of Christmas had exhaled, producing, among other things, classy blown glass, dangling brightly from overhead. There's also interesting, glinting jewelry, full of detailed twists and turns that make you look and look again. The refined work of Americans dazzles in earrings of shiny red, blue and green, some constructed of brightly colored feathers. Off the beaten fashion path, a head-turning poncho, made of stamped blue velvet, wavers from light to dark should you swirl in front of admirers. A stretchy silk top looks tiny, waiting for your svelte torso to expand it. This place loves hues: in dizzyingly irregular paperweights or in a photograph of shapes reflected in water, hypnotically blue-blurred. Artily decorative works include a tiny wire musician, who seems to lurch rhythmically towards his piano. Or a carved wooden book, perfect for cunningly concealing your precious diamond ring.

Boyish Joy to the World

A HALF-CUBAN BOY, living with his single mother and hard-to-please Grammy, David Valdes Greenwood comes across as observant and charming in his new collection of stories, A Little Fruitcake: A Childhood in Holidays. Some early signs of his gay identity include wanting a doll (grudgingly given) and white skates (not the icky hockey ones) like his heroine's, Dorothy Hamill. His endearing wackiness—a Lego Nativity scene that no one quite understands; his trademark imitation of Nixon's good-bye wave followed by a daring slide down a snowy roof, ripping his new snowsuit from top to toe—are part of his endearing desire to both fit in and be original. Hardscrabble Maine poverty, lonely tube socks under the Christmas tree, and fudge, which went disproportionately to his brother, were offset by his housecleaning earnings, put toward 36 tiny presents for relatives and the local librarian. The book inspires a fond and slightly melancholy glow.

Got Eggnog? Most of us—the 20- and 30-somethings, at least—don't recall the milkman in his white truck, rolling up in the wee hours and leaving jugs for the morning's cereal. We gulped down the mass-produced stuff, not giving the company, the carton or the cow a second thought. Lucky for us, Crescent Ridge Dairy did. After 75 years, the Parrish family still offers home delivery of their hormone-free products—don't miss the seasonal eggnog, a creamy concoction that pours out thick and coats your glass with fresh nutmeg specks—from their Sharon farm to much of the Boston area, including Whole Foods Markets. Added bonus: They still use those nostalgic glass bottles.

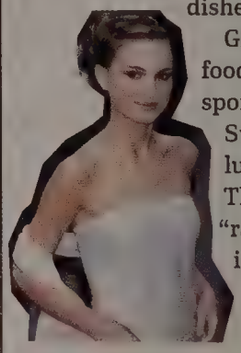
UNCOOKED, BUT NOT UNPLUGGED



Raw materials for the North End

WHEN GREZZO OPENS its doors in Boston's North End next month, don't expect the fragrance of garlic sizzling in olive oil. Despite the bluster of January, you won't catch a tantalizing whiff of piping-hot soup. In fact, inside the kitchen you won't see cooks hovering over hot stoves, because Grezzo will be our city's first "upscale, gourmet, 100 percent raw food" restaurant, according to owner and cookbook author Alissa Cohen.

How raw is it? It's so raw, nothing is heated above 114 degrees, in order to retain enzymes believed to be crucial for optimum digestion and absorption of nutrients. So raw, it's a vegan cuisine derived solely from nuts, grains, legumes, fruits and vegetables—a regime nicknamed "liquid plumber" by novice adherents.

"Raw" doesn't just mean "salad." Grezzo will feature fare such as saffron-infused butternut squash soup, wild mushroom ravioli with asparagus cream and dark chocolate ganache truffles. But the aforementioned "ravioli," "cream" and "ganache" are stylized replicas, the end result of soaking, sprouting, dehydrating, blending and juicing the basic ingredients to render them more digestible, then assembling incredibly complicated, labor-intensive dishes.

Grezzo isn't a place for fast food, an inexpensive meal or spontaneity, either; dinner, Sunday brunch and Saturday lunch are by reservation only. Though "grezzo" is Italian for "raw, crude, coarse," the dining room décor is refined and elegant. Only one question remains: Hot… or not?

IN THE RAW Natalie Portman is one of several celebs who reportedly like their food uncooked.

GOOD FOOD FORTUNE

Sibling restaurateurs the Sidell sisters dig the Chinese at Myers + Chang.

VENTURING AWAY FROM comfort food and steak dinners was a welcome change for us. Once we opened the door at Myers + Chang in the South End on a frigid winter night, we felt warm and were ready to eat. The joint venture from Christopher Myers and Joanne Chang puts a fresh spin on going out for Chinese. To us, it seemed like a great spot for some girl—and sister—time.

The decor sets the tone. A retro yet modern diner with some pop and kitsch (their Web site is on Myspace, after all), the room screams late-night. Beverly Hills–pink stools stand at a counter, while '50s-style chairs grace fuss-free tables. Windows and walls display red dragon sketches, white-lettered menu items and clever haikus. And a killer iPod-driven sound system fuels the energy.

The place is built for fun. And the fun comes with very good food.

We started with the Asian pickles ($4), which included an assortment of cold, house-marinated veggies. Stephi enjoyed the carrots two ways—julienned and planked, each with distinct flavors. The Thai bird chili and ginger syrup–soaked cauliflower was another hit. Kathy went for the spice: kimchee and the garlic cucumbers, topped with slightly soft, potent jalepeños.

For main courses, Stephi gravitated to the seafood, choosing the clams in black bean sauce ($9), which were flavorful and perfectly seasoned. Another score: the 1½ pound lobster (market price), prepared in a red coconut curry sauce with sticky rice. Stephi loved how they kept the meat and the tamale of the lobster intact. Unfortunately, most restaurants clean out the cavity. She's always asking the kitchen not to! This was a great detail. The curry sauce itself was subtle, not overwhelming the fish's flavor.

Kathy went for the carbs. Given Chang's meticulous baking background (with her Flour Bakery + Café), Kathy's favorites came as no surprise—everything in a dough or with a crust. Her top pick was the yellow-chive and Chinese sausage pancakes ($8), an original twist on the scallion pancake. Perfectly flaky layered dough laced with bits of pork sausage boasted a dark, crunchy crust. Mama Chang's pork-and-chive dumplings ($11), wrapped in pan-seared, paper-thin wonton dough, were delicious and delicate. This is food crafted with two generations of love.

Trying to pace ourselves, we would have liked to slow things down at dinner. The menu warns: "To ensure that your food comes to you as fresh as possible, dishes may arrive at your table at different times." During our visit, everything arrived at once. This was a tad overwhelming. We could have used a little more time to enjoy the experience and our time together.

And, of course, to linger over the drinks. Stephi washed down dinner with an affordable and satisfying bottle of Dutton-Goldfield 2002 Syrah ($48). There were a few bottles over 50 dollars, and they were mostly champagnes. There are 11 beer offerings—including not only Tsing Tao and Tiger, but also two from a brewery in Hitachino, Japan, and Pork Slap from Butternuts in New York. Kathy quenched her thirst with the muddled lychee-and-vanilla Chinese soda ($4).

The fun continues in the bubble gum–pink to-go bags (not your everyday Chinese takeout). Ours contained tea-smoked pork spare ribs ($12) and King Main's fried rice ($9) with an egg, sunny side up. The latter made a great midnight snack.

Such playfulness leaves the impression that neither Myers (who also owns Great Bay, Radius and Via Matta with partners Esti Parsons and Michael Schlow) nor Chang is trying to prove something here. Their restaurant is original, authentic, comfortable and arrogance-free. That makes it a refreshing addition to the Boston dining scene. ×××

Perfection has its price.

Of course it tastes better than other beers. We've had over 600 years to get the recipe right. Our esteemed brewery has been producing beer in Leuven since 1366. Which means we've been around a bit longer than most. Mind you, over the years our beer has witnessed the odd change or two. For instance, our customers no longer drink it to ward off the Plague, as they used to in medieval times. However, one thing has stayed the same after all these years. Stella Artois is still painstakingly brewed in a time-honored tradition with the choicest ingredients. Which is why our customers have kept coming back for more, even after 600 years.

Always enjoy responsibly. www.stellaartois.com

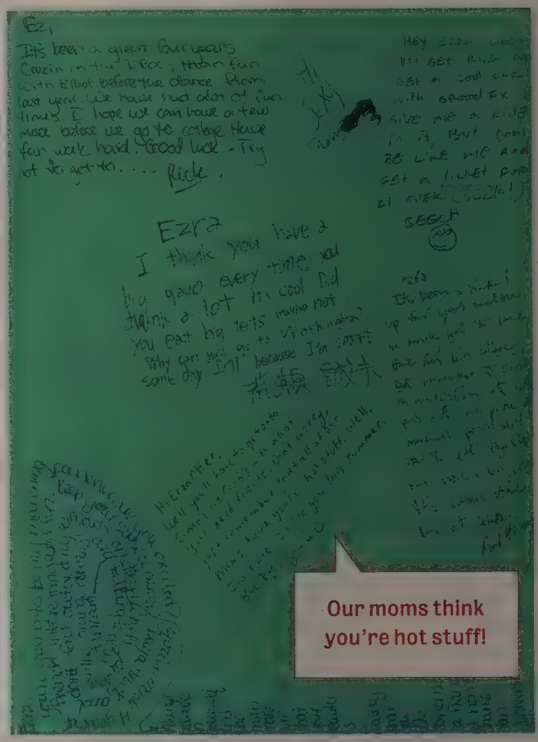
HAVE A NEAT SUMMER

When it comes to yearbook signatures, maybe some things are better left unsaid.

A COUPLE WEEKS AGO, I accompanied Heather to her 10-year high school reunion. When we got home, she broke out her yearbook to figure out how everyone seemed to get so good-looking. Seriously—I don't know what her classmates looked like back in the day, but a decade out of high school they resemble what would happen if Suri Cruise and Tom Brady's babies had about 100 kids. Whereas at my high school reunion, most of the formerly attractive people looked like Paul Giamatti. And that was just the women.



So I wasn't surprised by the lack of ugly mulleted dudes posing in front of Camaros with baby seats in her Hingham High yearbook. What did surprise me were the pristine pages, unmarred by signatures. "We didn't sign our yearbooks," Heather told me. "We didn't want to ruin them." Ruin them? The signatures are the best part! What's a high school yearbook without pages and pages of variations on "Have a neat summer!" from people you no longer remember? I dug out mine to show Heather how nice it is to have your past immortalized by your peers.

It turns out she might've made the right call with the no-signatures policy. I'm not sure what I was expecting—heartfelt paeans to my general awesomeness, pages of sorrow and regret from girls who never got to ride shotgun in my IROC? What I found was a record of degeneracy to shame Amy Winehouse. After reading my senior yearbook, I'm kind of amazed I'm not on a reality show.

For one thing, many of the entries are addressed to "Rezin." One such scribbling included a reminisce about the time "the deal went down." Apparently, I was not only party to deals going down, but I fraternized with people who used slang more appropriate to Starsky and Hutch. Other friends commended me for being able to "blow chunks like a goddamn animal" and suggested we should soon reconvene to "build another beer-a-mid," though I should be careful not to "pass out and puke off someone's porch." Nobu, the Japanese exchange student, wrote, "I think you have a big gazo every time," which makes somewhat more sense knowing that "gazo" was his approximation of "guzzle."

Further inspection of my yearbook revealed another problem with signatures-as-historical-record: In high school, your perception of time is so myopic that the most important thing that ever happened to you is probably whatever happened last weekend. One girl, Molly, wrote, "That was funny what you did to Elliot on Sunday." Boy, was it ever! It was so funny that I have no idea what you're talking about. Likewise my friend Rick's comment, "I'll never forget the time we got kicked off the basketball team for five minutes." Actually, Rick, I'll never remember the time we got kicked off the basketball team for five minutes. That sounds like a good story, though.

In addition to references to substance abuse and forgotten inside jokes, my yearbook's pages also paint a telling picture of my pathetic high school love life, as conveyed through multiple female-penned sentiments to the effect that I'm a really nice guy. And, as everyone knows, "really nice guy" is high school code for "not getting any." More concise variations on that idea came from Meg, who wrote, "I feel bad that you have had such bad luck with girls," and another, Jennie, who counseled me that I should "just remember that all our moms think you're hot stuff."

So, based on what I've read thus far, I was a burnout with no love life. Sweet. Thanks for the memories. But there are signs that, toward the end of senior year, things were improving on the ladies front. My friend Adam wrote, "One thing I can say that I truly do like about you, Ez, is your girlfriend's huge boobs." Nobu made a similar comment, though somewhat less tastefully. And one female classmate wrote, "I want you to take me weight lifting with you sometime, just so I can see that body of yours working out."

As embarrassing as a lot of this is, it goes both ways. I called my friend Elliot to find out what words of wisdom I had for him, circa 1995. "You saw my dad looking through my yearbook, so you decided to do something to freak him out," Elliot said. "You drew a picture of me driving his van, doing a burnout while smoking weed and funneling a beer. Also, there are two people in the back having sex and my little brother is there, smoking a bowl. And there's a bald eagle strapped to the fender, and I'm yelling, 'Dad, this is what I do when you're not around!'"

I've gotta congratulate my high school self on that one. That's pretty funny—at least, I hope it is. Based on the comments in my own yearbook, the only really unrealistic feature of that tableau is the bald eagle. Well, that and the sex. ✖✖✖

The Dance { JOHN D. SPOONER }

I'VE GOT A LITTLE LIST

Memorable books, gifts, food and more

MANY COLLEGE graduates go west to seek their fortunes, particularly to Hollywood. When I was released from the Army Medical Corps in San Antonio, I also headed for Los Angeles. I wanted to write for TV or the movies. I told women that I wanted to act as well (much more enticing). Of course, acting isn't as wonderful or easy as school performances might have us believe. Life is punctuated by wonderful and easy, but the majority is hard. Harder still if you're a professional actor. One of the exceptions to this is Téa Leoni. And a film treat in 2007 was the quirky thriller You Kill Me, starring Leoni and Ben Kingsley.

For novels this year, the best thing I've read about New Orleans and Katrina was James Lee Burke's The Tin Roof Blowdown, an absolute eye-opener about the horrors of that hurricane. More treats in the books department include Ward Just's Forgetfulness, a look at terror, politics, creativity and loss, and William Martin's The Lost Constitution, about a search for an original draft of that famous document. John Burdett's Bangkok Haunts, meanwhile, makes me itch for Thailand. (Although I'll never be allowed to go. I can only retaliate by barring my wife from taking an acting class with Michael Douglas.)

Want a unique gift for the little people in your life? It's a hike to South Dartmouth, but in the village of Padanaram, the Woodhouse Shop is like stepping into an old five-and-dime store in Lake Wobegon. It sell a marble game perfect for children. It's made of wood by a local craftsman and, I can attest, kids will play with it alone for hours. (Call it the babysitter!) The game costs $45 and looks like things used to look: homemade. The store also sells dollhouses and unique walking sticks for children.

Now for the adult crowd. Did you ever take an art survey course in college? If you skipped lectures and were a loner, it was tough to get notes on the great paintings. Likewise, do you enjoy museums but find audio tours frustrating? Check out Belmont-based Masterpiece Cards, which are smart and beautifully produced with pithy descriptions and history. Packs include works from the East Coast as well as from around the world. They let you fake it like a graduate student.

The foodies out there should head to Hamersley's Bistro. The best single dish I had in a restaurant this year was the curried swordfish with preserved lemon at the South End staple. Seldom can I say it wasn't the company; it wasn't the booze; it was the fish. The top makeover this year is Toscano on Charles Street. Great food and tired surroundings have morphed into greater food and wow-factor ambiance. Better try it before Wellesley and Weston people line up their Cayennes.

Speaking of conspicuous everything, my father's history bible was Edward Gibbon's The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire. Cullen Murphy, former editor of The Atlantic Monthly and currently at Vanity Fair, is an elegant writer. Read his Are We Rome? if you think we're on the slippery slide. But don't let that stop you from blowing it out on New Year's Eve. As my granddaughter would say, "Happy to you." ✖✖✖

BIG-TICKET TEAM

The C's look like championship contenders.

REMEMBER WHEN the Celtics—sorry to say it—sucked? They tried, sure. They made trades. They brought in Rick Pitino. They brought in new, local owners. They hired ML Carr and then fired him. Thankfully, things in the world of sports can change like the Boston weather, and now we have Kevin Garnett. News of the deal had the city buzzing. Most people started thinking about the glory days of the '80s. I only had to go back to the '90s, covering cocaptains Antoine Walker and Paul Pierce.

It was fun, sure, but nothing even resembling a championship contender. Then Danny Ainge joined the front-office fray. I can't tell you how many times I answered the question, "What is Danny doing?" during his first three years in Boston. But soon the question stopped coming as apathy set in and losses piled up. The once-proud Celts were boring and unimportant in the Boston sports landscape. Ainge was feeling the heat.

The fun-loving, young guys weren't going to cut it anymore. Not with the owners and especially not with the fans. Ainge was desperate. And sometimes desperation is a good thing. So what did he do? He made like Big Papi and hit a grand slam in the clutch. The Big Ticket was introduced to Boston on the last day in July. Celtics Nation was supposed to believe, yes believe, that basketball was back in Boston.

I admit asking myself, "Is this a good thing?" My Celtics faith may have wavered in recent years, but I'm open to change. Garnett just wasn't what I expected. I was starting to buy into the young kids. It wasn't so long ago that I wrote glowingly about Al Jefferson in this space. I was going to enjoy the ride as Big Al developed into a top player. "But noooooooooo!" as John Belushi used to say. Ainge had to shift gears… and Boston's glad he did.

So where does that leave the Celtics? Honestly, with one of the best players the game has ever seen. Better than Al Jefferson will ever be. Better than Larry Bird? Former Celtics great Cedric Maxwell thinks so. Maxwell created quite a stir with that comment and, right or wrong, you can see where he's coming from. Garnett's game is so complete—not just offensively; he might also be the best defensive big man of his time.

What the Celtics have on their hands now is a race against time, with former All-Star Ray Allen, who's 32, Garnett, who's 31, and Pierce, who's just a kid, turning 30 in October. At those ages, I'm not suggesting AARP, but these three have played a lot of basketball and the tread on the old tires has to be worn. So far, they look damn good. I think it's safe to say the Celtics will win more than 24 games like they did last season; heck, they're almost there now.

So with the start of another era in Boston with the new Big Three, I'm on board. Yes, the Celtics did the right thing. I'm just not so sure they'll be good enough to win the championship. That's impossible to predict this early in the season, but they've got a legitimate shot. The Big Ticket has made the Celtics just that: a big-ticket team. ✖✖✖

ON BIG BABY, OVER/UNDERS, TROY BROWN AND DICE-K

3 Guys at Gillette

1. "Come on, Everybody Up!" Guy: Forget the score, this dude's only concern is that everyone in his section is standing, and that they're doing so (in his mind) solely because he's on his feet and waving his arms around like he just contracted mad cow disease. And when the Pats pull through, he starts congratulating himself like Rick Moranis at the end of Ghostbusters 2. That's right, buddy. It was all because of you.

2. I-Know-the-Players'-Numbers Guy: Fans prove their devotion in different ways. This one yells out a player's name—no matter how obscure—anytime he gets called for a penalty. Holding on #32? "Damn, Rashard Baker! Seely needs to get him off special teams!!" Oooh, bonus point for knowing the coach's name.

3. Fantasy Guy: It's bad enough when Fantasy Guy's players are on the field, but worse when they're not, as he spends an entire goal line stand looking at the jumbotron scoreboard and saying things like, "Oh boy, I hope the Dolphins didn't score on an interception return, I'm going against their defense."

HUGE SIGH OF RELIEF

How would you have reacted if Jason Varitek had really been named in George Mitchell's steroid investigation? We heard the rumors and within five minutes already had seven excuses for how it happened, like the time Tek accidentally fell on a needle while saving a cat from a tree. Anyway, 'twas only a rumor and that's fine by us. Not so fine by Roger Clemens and Andy Pettitte though... kind of sucks by those guys.

5 GIFTS FOR THE HOLIDAYS

Glen Davis
More PT: It's too early to draw any conclusions about Big Baby, but here's what we know: In the seven games in which he's played 15 minutes or more, he's averaging nine points and nearly seven rebounds. Unless he's in foul trouble (a big unless), BBD needs some run. And while we're at it, how about hooking him up with an ESPN.com player mug shot that doesn't look like he's getting probed?

Troy Brown
One More Catch: At this point in his career, Brown isn't one of the 45 guys who give the Pats the best chance to win every Sunday. But the only thing that could make this regular season any sweeter would be seeing Troy take the field again—and do so as a part of this historic offense.

Gregg Easterbrook, Don Shula & Co.
19-0: Nothing says Merry Christmas like a steaming pile of undefeated coal in the stockings of anyone who tried to piss in the Patriots pot this season. And we'll have to find a little something special for Mercury Morris—say, a loaded gun, a bottle of whiskey and a Morrissey CD.

Mike Gorman
Chalk-proof Poncho: Hey, this is KG's World and he'll roll as he pleases, but maybe we're getting just a little sick of watching him soak Gorman with chalk before every game. Can you imagine if your boss came into your office every time he had a big meeting and dumped a bucket of staples on your head for good luck? At first it's a little funny, but at some point it's like, "So, we're really gonna keep doing this, huh?"

Dice-K
Johan Santana: So you know how Dice-K can be a little hard on himself sometimes? Pitching behind Santana and Josh Beckett would give him one more year to better adjust to American baseball without feeling the weight of a franchise on his shoulders. We get Santana; Dice-K stresses less and pitches better. It's a win-win.

2 GAMBLERS' PARADISES

1. The Over on the Pats: If you haven't been riding this one all year, you haven't been living (or maybe you just don't have a severe gambling problem). At press time, the Pats are 10-3 against the over, and that's sure to be 11-3 after they drop 45 through a snowstorm on the Jets.

2. The Under on the Celtics: This one isn't quite as foolproof, but the C's are a more-than-respectable 13-7 against the under this year, and that's even skewed a little thanks to two overtime games that [illegible]. Assistant coach and defensive mastermind Tom Thibodeau has turned [illegible] into the championship [illegible] of the NBA, getting by [illegible] pretty [illegible] it's not [illegible] No. 17 [illegible]

4 DATES TO WATCH

12/26 We're exactly two months away from the deadline for all players to report to Spring Training, and at this point there are only two things we know for sure about Feb. 26: (1) Curt Schilling will report at 230 pounds; and (2) Manny won't report at all.

12/29 Big night for the Patriots as they—in all likelihood—take the field against the Giants with an undefeated regular season on the line. Yeah, we know, it means nothing unless they win the Super Bowl, but take a step back and enjoy it for a second. Can you imagine if someone told you 10 years ago that you'd live to see the Patriots go 16-0?

12/31 Say goodbye to 2007 in style: Boston Bruins... Atlanta Thrashers... TD Banknorth Garden... Catch the fever!

1/2 The Celtics take on the Houston Rockets and close out a nine-game stretch that includes seven tilts against 2006 playoff teams and a week-long West Coast swing. When this one's done, Celtic naysayers will either be louder than ever or off getting a drink with the guys who spent the NFL pre-season whining about the Randy Moss trade.

WES WELKER

IF THE NFL is organized football heaven, Wes Welker spent the last two years stuck in purgatory. For all but four of the 32 games Welker played with the Miami Dolphins prior to this season, either Joey Harrington or Gus Frerotte was his starting quarterback. To ask a wide receiver to flourish under those conditions is the equivalent of asking an EMT to perform successful CPR on two mannequins. But still, Welker persevered. So much so that last March, the Patriots were willing to part with a future second-round pick (a move magnified by the fact that they'd only give up a fourth rounder for Randy Moss) to bring him to Foxborough. Eight months later, he's not only flourishing but has become an irreplaceable part of the most explosive, terrifying offense in NFL history.

Life couldn't be much better for the 26-year-old Oklahoma native. He works in Foxborough but lives in the heart of Boston. Many of his teammates have set up shop in suburbia, but for Welker that was never even an option. "I'm a young, single guy, so when I got to New England, I was like, 'What am I going to do, go home and watch TV all day?' I knew I was going to live in the city. There's so much to do in Boston. It's great to just walk out the door and have everything right there."

When he does walk out the door, you can find him at any one of his favorite local restaurants—places like Sonsie, Grill 23, Smith & Wollensky and Sorellina—hanging with teammates who never have much trouble finding an excuse to visit their city- dwelling buddy. "Most of them will hit me up when they're in town, and a lot of times during off days guys will just come by and crash. It's great."

I knew I was going to live in the city. There's so much to do in Boston. It's great to just walk out the door and have everything right there.

On the field, his transition's been just as seamless. At press time, he's second in the NFL in receptions, ranks in the top 12 in touchdowns and receiving yards and is on pace to supplant Tom Brady as the best excuse for otherwise–uninterested girlfriends to sit through Patriots Sundays.

His mastery of the slot position—the way he fearlessly works the middle of the field and makes guys twice his size look like they're wearing banana peels for cleats—has thrown him into instant stardom. But like any good Patriot, he's quick to point out the teammates who've helped him make this year a successful one.

There's Troy Brown, one of only two offensive players who were there when Bill Belichick took over in 2000 and the man who shined as the Pats' slot receiver before Welker arrived.

"He knows the offense so well. We sit together in meetings and he can always point something out that I've missed. It's so valuable to have a guy like him, that's been in this system and been a dominant player in this league for many years, and for me to be able to pick his brain is great."

Then there's that other guy Welker gets asked about on occasion; the source of the receiver's 90-plus catches this season. As you'd expect, he's quick to dish on Brady. He reveals the QB is an absolute animal on the road, that he bites his toe nails and that Gisele makes the best brownies of any significant other on the team. Of course, he shared none of these things, but what he did say, even if it wasn't groundbreaking, felt infinitely more meaningful coming from a teammate than from another TV talking head.

"As hard as Tom works and prepares, you just sit there and shake your head. I mean he's one of those guys you don't even try to keep up with because you'd kill yourself. I can be hard-headed at times on the field, but in the end I realize, this is Tom, I have to listen to him and make sure I'm in the right place."

And what about a potential undefeated season or an NFL reception title? "None of that means a thing," he says. "We're just out there trying to win football games, and if that stuff happens it happens."

With that attitude, Welker's definitely in the right place. ✖✖✖

Soroff On FRANCES RIVERA

With a special report on her life as a local news anchor

Stunning Filipino news anchor Frances Rivera cohosts 7News at 5, 6 and 11 pm with co-anchor Randy Price and the 10 pm broadcast on CW56 with Matt Lorch. Raised in Dallas, Texas, she earned a bachelor's degree in journalism from the University of the Philippines. During her TV career, she has worked behind the camera at CBS News on the This Morning show and as part of the network's political unit covering the 1996 presidential election. On air, she worked at KFDX in Wichita Falls, Texas, and at KWTV in Oklahoma City, Okla., as well as cohosted and reported for the nationally syndicated PBS program Asian America. She joined 7News in 2001 and recently earned an Emmy. She and her husband, Stuart, live in Charlestown.

Jonathan Soroff: You're Filipino. Do you speak Tagalog?
Frances Rivera: I can understand it. I can bargain, get directions and order from a menu. I also know when people are talking about me.

Favorite thing about the culture?
The food. Food is love. All the desserts dripping in oil and butter and fried.

Most Filipino aspect of Boston?
[Also] the food. For every emotion, there's a food. If there's a funeral, it involves food; a celebration, food. At Fenway, there's a Fenway frank. Everything socially revolves around food.

You're not the average Barbie-doll anchor. Is that an advantage or a disadvantage?
A bit of both. For somebody who's not ready for it, my look may not be palatable, but for others it could be the reason they remember to tune in.

You're a secret karaoke princess. Favorite song to perform?
Well, it's not a secret anymore, but it used to be Journey's "Don't Stop Believing." That got diluted by The Sopranos and Laguna Beach, so I had to switch to Night Ranger's "Sister Christian."

Most you ever won doing karaoke?
A little gold trophy from the Purple Shamrock.

Where do you keep it?
On my desk, behind a picture of me and my husband.

Which are you more proud of: that or the Emmy?
I'm equally proud. They were both fueled by passion.

PHOTOGRAPH BY Michael Piazza

You were named one of the most stylish people in Boston. What does that mean to you?
I guess it's affirmation that I have maybe a few more hits than misses, because there are definitely a lot of misses.

Biggest fashion faux pas?
Well, I have an elderly gentleman viewer who calls every time I wear dark nail polish on the air. He says it looks black, but it's not, and he gives this whole dissertation on what he feels are acceptable nail colors. Silvers, pearly whites and pinks are good. Darks and reds are not.

Jeans tucked into high boots.

Your TV makeup is a bit drag-queenish...
I've been told that, primarily by my husband.

Difference between that and off camera?
I'm trying to tone things down, especially with the coming of high def. Less is more. I'm petrified of high def.

Beauty secret?
My Zeno zit zapper. It gets rid of them much quicker than any other way. It's my prized possession.

Daily regimen?
I try to run three times a week, the key word being "try." It doesn't always happen.

How important are your looks to what you do?
I try not to think they are, but then you have the e-mails and calls, and everybody feels like they're entitled to verbalize how they feel about your appearance. So because it's important to everybody else, it's become important to me.

One thing that'd surprise people about you?
Well, my karaoke secret's out, so now you know.

Oh, c'mon! There must be more.
OK, I have a chronic case of road rage. I think it's a combination of Boston drivers and the fact that I'm always 10 minutes late for everything.

Most obnoxious question you ever asked?
Other than sticking a microphone in somebody's face [after] they've been accused of a heinous crime? Nothing comes to mind, although with friends, all bets are off. I'll ask a friend anything.

If you weren't a news anchor, what would you be doing?
I've always wanted to own my own flower shop. I love doing floral arrangements.

Why not do it on the air?
That would be fun. A calla lily between me and Randy one day, a ranunculus the next.

Does Randy Price have a mean streak?
Not at all. That man is 100-percent concentrated sunshine.

Dirtiest thing he ever did to you?
Spit at me unintentionally. We sit so close, we do it to each other all the time.

Biggest on-air faux pas?
Sports names. I get New England ones right because I practice them, but some hockey guy from anywhere else, no way.

Celebrity crush?
Josh Duhamel. No. 1. He's dreamy. I don't get the George Clooney thing. I kinda get Brad Pitt, but I'm over it. Duhamel is the man.

Stupidest story you ever covered?
Early on, in Electra, Texas, I had to do a full-on report about the Electra Goat Barbecue.

Most important story?
As an anchor, the Rhode Island nightclub fire. I was on the air from four in the morning to one in the afternoon, nonstop.

Last question: Strangest thing you ever read when Googling yourself?
I don't Google. I made a pact with myself a few years ago not to. Before you even meet somebody you have all this information about them, and it's just too much. ×××

TOO MANY CHEFS

LAST SUMMER, chef Barbara Lynch opened Stir, a demonstration kitchen on the same South End block she colonized with the Butcher Shop, Plum Produce and B&G Oysters. It hardly seemed Lynch needed to demonstrate anything. She owns a James Beard Award, an army of worshipful restaurant critics and a gastro-empire that, having outgrown the cloistered dining room of her flagship No. 9 Park, will soon stretch as far as Fort Point. While Lynch is the undisputed empress of Boston's culinary scene, she's also writing a cookbook. And the measure of a good cookbook isn't whether it can dazzle ("Stir three pounds beluga caviar with an equal amount of whole black truffles, whip with a silver truncheon...").

Rather, it's whether any lout off the street can use the recipes to concoct a dish approximating the ideal. So we offered Lynch the services of two louts—editors Nick Altschuller and Andrew Rimas—who would come to Stir and test-drive her recipes. They would prepare a complete New Year's Eve dinner of tomato tart tatin, walnut risotto, sole en papillote and white chocolate soup, and Lynch would judge their efforts.

On a bright December morning, they unfurled their aprons and, under the concerned watch of Stir's manager Tracy Kim and No. 9's public relations and marketing manager Sarah Hearn, smacked their hands together, wondering aloud where the refrigerator was.

Nick's tomato tart tatin

Humbly, I'm a small step above complete novice. I have cooked. People have eaten. No one threw up. As such, I could be a serviceable line cook at a Chuck Wagon. I have no business preparing a meal for a James Beard Award winner. They say the best food is made with love. Barbara was about to taste food made with fear.

The initial step in this recipe is to prepare a tomato confit by first peeling and quartering a cluster of plum tomatoes. A helpful tip is to cut a small X on the bottom of each tomato, blanch it and then dunk it in an ice bath, thus causing the skin to pucker, making it easier to peel. It also produces a vegetarian's version of the greased pig. Imagine bringing a knife to the shower and trying to dice your soap. I expect a professional chef could complete this task in less than 10 minutes. It took me almost an hour.

I spread the meticulously sectioned tomatoes onto a couple of baking pans with sliced garlic and several glugs from a can of olive oil, then topped it all with sprigs of thyme. After 15 minutes in a magnawave oven at 325°F, I had certifiable confit. Even Sarah gave me a surprised yet sincere, "Looks good." Not hungry, but starved for the comfort of a compliment, I savored her words like a death-row dinner.

My confidence grew as I slowly sautéed my onions. Next to frying bacon, the smell of sautéing onions is an amateur chef's best disguise. You could be making onion and hemlock sandwiches, and anyone in the room with nostrils would be asking for a taste. Divvied into a tart pan and topped with rounds of pastry dough, I watched my concoction bubble in the oven with the sense that I had a winner on my hands. Then

I looked to my prep tray and spotted an unsqueezed pipette bag of mustard.

In a test kitchen, cries of anguish are usually followed by skin grafts or a frantic search for a missing finger. I tried to ease my pain with the thought, "Perhaps the very creator of this recipe won't notice one of her key ingredients is missing," but it wouldn't stay down. Short of slapping Andrew's fish to the floor, there wasn't much I could do to distract her from my negligence. So I garnished like I've never garnished before (and I haven't) and hoped for the best.

Barbara's verdict:

She looked at my plate with a blank face. Searching for small victories, I concluded that no expression is better than a bad one. "Well, the tomatoes look awesome," she said. And with that, my soul jumped like a popped kernel.

After tasting, she added: "the tomatoes are perfect. The pastry looks good, and the mascarpone is nice." (I didn't actually make the mascarpone, but thank you.) But did she notice anything missing?

SHORT OF SLAPPING ANDREW'S FISH TO THE FLOOR, THERE WASN'T MUCH I COULD DO. SO I GARNISHED LIKE I'VE NEVER GARNISHED BEFORE.

"Mustard. Mustard will bring that thing together."

Granted, my mise en place is normally a pot and whatever is on my can shelf, but I've never made anything more delicious. Check the recipe at the end to make your own, and leave the mustard in the fridge for tatin à la Nick.

Andrew's walnut risotto

If I want to experience a crushing sense of doom, I can ponder a godless, meaningless universe framed by death, or I can boil rice. It's the simple dishes like rice or a good fried egg that drag my ego into a dark alley and kneecap it. There's no glory in cooking them properly, just shame in failure. Like arm-wrestling your grandmother.

Rice is the most aggravating of starches, and risotto is the worst. The trick—melting the grains into a creamy porridge without boiling it into goop—is an art on par with baroque sculpture. This recipe, using candied walnuts and pomegranate, requires finesse and patience. Sadly, my customary approach in the kitchen is shock and awe.

The dish started well. I tossed walnuts—those little brown mouse brains of the nut world—in sugar and spice, and toasted them in an oven that looked like evidence of the South End's illegal nuclear enrichment program. Then I fried onions with dry arborio rice, just like I'd learned from private experiments in paella. Adding a splash of wine and water, the rice began to bleed starch. But I had already made the day's fatal mistake.

"You know, risotto ought to be served right away," said Sarah. So perhaps I shouldn't have started cooking it two hours before plating. I set the pot aside. From such small acts, great, gloopy horrors are born. I could think of nothing else to do but prep fruit.

Tracy shared a tip: when seeding a pomegranate, immerse it in a bowl of water. The water prevents jets of juice from staining your clothes with red marks, as if you've been attacked by a zealous editor.

When I returned to the pot hours later, I stirred it with hot tap water instead of boiling up a kettle, as instructed. Even with the additions of great tumbleweeds of shaved cheese and a bowl of whipped cream, the risotto had the texture of spackle. When I tried to fling some onto a plate, it clung doggedly to the spoon. But with a halo of cheese and a crown of pomegranate seeds, it actually looked pretty, if you consider quicksand pretty.

It tasted more elegant than it looked, with the pomegranate seeds adding an acid snap to the oaky walnuts and buttery cheese.

Barbara's verdict:

"A little overcooked. It tastes like rice with walnuts, not so much a creamy risotto." Drat.

Andrew's sole en papillote

Fish can't be cooked by brutes. You can't blast it with heat like a pot roast, or hack it apart like cabbage. To cook fish, you need to understand the yield of its moistened flesh, its gentle perfume, its exquisite frailty. You must treat it like a timid lover, coaxing out its flavors with gifts of wine and kisses of fire. Or if that doesn't work, throw it in the fryer and choke it with tartar sauce.

Barbara's recipe called for grapefruit. I don't have much experience with citrus, since I've always thought of it as merely something that girls put into vodka. The recipe included detailed instructions not only on peeling a grapefruit, but on using a knife to extract the flesh without larding it with pith.

"Oh, don't do that!" said Sarah, springing up from her chair and running to my station. She removed the six-inch knife which I was about to gamely plunge through my wrist bone. It was 10:50 am. We had just avoided our first amputation.

Fearing for Stir's insurance premiums, Sarah showed me how to safely butcher a grapefruit, angling the knife around the sinews so that she didn't waste a scrap of flesh. Her wedges were beautifully whole and symmetrical, like tiny pink leprechaun steaks. Mine looked like they had been detonated. Then I terrified everyone by picking up a mandoline and giggling. Sarah visibly winced as I shredded a fennel bulb into paper ribbons.

"En papillote" means baked in parchment, so the fillets, along with the grapefruit, fennel, blanched haricots verts and scoops of seasoned butter, had to be wrapped in packages and bound with twine. I was wrestling with the first of these when Barbara entered the kitchen. Her gaze flicked across the scene—flour clouds, dismembered fruits, a dozen spent pots, the detritus of Nick's assault on plum tomatoes. She saw me, a wad of raw fish dripping from one fist, twine in the other. A deep ignorance of knots writ across my sweating brow.

"Let me help you," was the first thing she said. And she did, tying the fish in a bundle pretty enough to hold a gift of decorative soaps you'd give to a grandmother with a broken arm. I felt shame and relief. But my next bundles looked neater. Five of them went into the nuclear centrifuge. None of them caught fire.

When opened, the packages released plumes of sweetened steam, and the fish simmered under a golden wash of butter. The grapefruit lent a hint of tartness to the firm, ivory flesh, and the fennel, instead of tasting like a jab of licorice, rounded out the dish with a subtle, vegetable tang.

Barbara's verdict:

"Oh, my god, this is delicious! Really delicious. The juice is nice. Good job." Wow. I didn't expect that.

Nick's white chocolate soup

I began preparing dessert at our most hectic moment. We were an hour behind schedule. With knife in hand, Andrew was trying to decipher citrus slicing instructions that read like NASA launch codes. I had both burners and the oven going, and with tomato splatters and flour covering me and my station, I looked like I'd just violently mugged a Mary Kay saleswoman.

Of course, this is when Barbara paid her first visit. After a quick look around, she made haste for the exit, backing away with one of the most skeptical "good lucks" I've ever received in my life.

That was rough. I had my mustardless tarts in the oven, and I was staring at two bricks of a sweet I've never really cared for. Like those weirdos who say ice cream is too cold or don't drink soda because the bubbles hurt their throats, I'm not a big chocolate fan.

The directions were foolproof. Throw an infusion of hot cream and vanilla bean on some chopped chocolate and salt, then blend and strain through a chinois. The result is something a chocoholic would want to take a bath in.

Spooned into a decorative bowl and topped with mini croutons of buttered brioche, the dessert looked great. Whether it tasted any good wasn't my call to make.

Barbara's verdict:

An honest-to-God "mmmmmm," followed by, "I could eat the whole thing, really." I may not like the taste, but I now love chocolate. It might have been the endorphin rush, but she was soon offering us fine wines and PBR tall boys. After three hours of hustle between two burners and a super oven set to "surface of sun," I passed on the booze. But Barbara repaid me with a cooking tip. With a sprinkle of fleur de sel and a few more croutons, what once seemed like vanilla-accented Elmer's became a crunchy, savory dessert that now has prominent placement in my extremely limited repertoire.

And now, a tip from me. Men, this dessert is decadent, swoon-inducing and incredibly easy.

HER GRAPEFRUIT WEDGES WERE BEAUTIFULLY WHOLE, LIKE TINY PINK LEPRECHAUN STEAKS. MINE LOOKED LIKE THEY HAD BEEN DETONATED.

It'll look like you slaved away, but if you can turn the stove on, the hard part is over. Cut the recipe out. Save it for Valentine's Day. Name your children after me.

Tomato Tart Tatin

Serves 6

- 2 tablespoons olive oil
- 2 large yellow onions, halved and thinly sliced
- 3–3½ tablespoons honey
- 1 teaspoon Dijon mustard, preferably whole-grain
- 1 sheet frozen all-butter puff pastry, thawed
- Flour for dusting your work surface
- Tomato confit (recipe follows)
- 1 egg
- 3 tablespoons mascarpone cheese
- Kosher salt and freshly ground black pepper

1. Slowly sauté the onions with 2 tablespoons honey in oil, until the onions turn evenly dark brown, about 35-40 minutes. If the pan dries out, add a tablespoon or two of water as needed. When the onions are caramelized, take the pan off the heat and stir in mustard. Season with salt and pepper. 2. Lightly flour your work surface, and roll the puff pastry out until ⅛-inch thick. Invert a tart pan (or pans) over the pastry sheet. Using a sharp paring knife, trace it around the tart pan. Transfer the cut-out dough to a very lightly floured sheet pan and refrigerate. 3. Heat the oven to 375°F. Use a finger to spread the remaining honey on the bottom of the tart pan. Place a single layer of tomato confit in the pan, covering the bottom completely. Distribute the caramelized onions over the tomatoes. 4. Place the cut-out dough directly over the onions. Lightly beat the egg and brush on top of the tart. Sprinkle each lightly with salt. Bake until the pastry is puffed and a deep, golden brown, 10–30 minutes depending on size. Allow the tart to cool for about 10 minutes. 5. Run a small knife around the edge of the tart to loosen it. Place a serving plate a little larger than the tart pan directly over the top and invert the tart onto the plate. Garnish each serving with a small dollop of mascarpone.

Tomato Confit

3½ pounds tomatoes, preferably cluster tomatoes or plum tomatoes
4 cloves garlic, thinly sliced
1 tablespoon sugar, if needed
2 teaspoons kosher salt and freshly ground black pepper
1 cup olive oil
6 sprigs fresh thyme

1. Peel the tomatoes by cutting a shallow X on the bottom of each one. Boil them, a few at a time, for 30 seconds and then immediately plunge them in ice water, which will cause their skin to pucker and make them easier to peel. Peel off the skins, cut into quarters lengthwise and seed. 2. Heat the oven to 325°F. Divide the garlic slices between two baking dishes, each about 9 x 13 inches, spreading them out on the bottom. Lay the tomato pieces interior side up in the pans. If the tomatoes aren't very sweet, sprinkle them with sugar. Sprinkle salt over the tomatoes and season generously with black pepper. Pour the olive oil over the tomatoes and top with thyme. Bake 25 to 30 minutes.

Walnut Risotto

Serves 6

1 cup whole walnuts
1 teaspoon sugar
½ teaspoon kosher salt
¼ teaspoon cayenne pepper
1 tablespoon unsalted butter
½ small onion, diced (about ⅓ cup)
1 cup arborio rice
¼ cup dry white wine
4 cups chicken broth or water, heated on stove
Seeds from 1 pomegranate

4 ounces Pecorino, preferably Pecorino Toscano, finely grated
1 tablespoon walnut oil
¼ cup heavy cream, whipped to medium-firm peaks
Kosher salt and freshly ground black pepper
Pomegranate molasses
Fleur de sel
2 teaspoons finely chopped fresh chives (optional)

1. Heat oven to 350°F. In a small bowl, toss the walnuts with sugar, salt and cayenne. Add 1½ teaspoons water and toss again. Spread the walnuts out on a baking sheet and toast until golden. Remove from oven and when cool, roughly chop. 2. Sauté onion in butter about 8 minutes. Add the rice and cook, stirring, for about 1 minute to slightly toast the grains. Add the wine, increase the heat, and cook until almost all of the wine has been absorbed and evaporated. Add about 1 cup of the boiling broth or water and cook, stirring every minute or two, until almost all of the broth has been absorbed. Continue cooking, adding more broth or water, about ½ cup at a time, and stir in this manner until the risotto is creamy and al dente, 20 to 25 minutes. 3. Stir in about half of the walnuts, half of the cheese and the walnut oil. Gently fold in the whipped cream and season to taste with a little salt and black pepper. Divide the risotto among six large plates. Sprinkle cheese and pomegranate seeds over the risotto. Finish with a pinch of fleur de sel, some chives, walnuts and a few drops of pomegranate molasses.

Sole en Papillote

Serves 6

24 haricots verts (about 2 ounces) cut in thirds on the diagonal
18 yellow wax beans (about 2 ounces) cut into three or four pieces on the diagonal
2 grapefruits, preferably cocktail grapefruits
4 - 5 limes
6 tablespoons unsalted butter, softened
3 tablespoons chopped fresh tarragon, plus about 3 tablespoons whole leaves
1 whole fresh fennel bulb, roots and stalks trimmed
4 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
2 pounds lemon sole, preferably 12 thin fillets
Kosher salt and freshly ground black pepper

1. Blanch the wax beans for 2 minutes and haricots verts for 1 minute in boiling water and transfer them to a bowl of ice water. 2. Zest the grapefruits to get 3 tablespoons (not packed) finely grated zest. Zest the limes for 3 tablespoons of zest. Reserve 1 lime for juicing. 3. Section the grapefruit, removing the pith and membrane, and reserve the juice. 4. In another small bowl, mash together the butter, grapefruit zest, lime zest, chopped tarragon, ¾ teaspoon of salt and a few grinds of pepper. 5. Slice the fennel bulb into translucent, paper-thin ribbons. 6. Heat the oven to 350°F. Using six sheets of parchment paper, half-sheet-pan-sized or larger, brush a tablespoon of the olive oil in the center of each piece. Divide the fennel among the parchment, placing it in the center. Place the fish on top of the fennel and then scatter the green beans and grapefruit sections over and around the fish. Drizzle about 1 tablespoon of grapefruit juice plus 1 teaspoon of fresh lime juice over each pile. Season each with a little salt and pepper and whole tarragon leaves. Divide the butter among the packages, placing it on top of the fish. 7. Gather the parchment paper up around the fish and use the twine to tie off the packages. Place the parchment purses on a sided baking sheet and bake 10–18 minutes, depending on the thickness of the fish and how tight the bundles are. The fish should be mostly opaque with some translucence in its center. 8. Let the packages rest a few minutes before serving them in large bowls or deeply sided plates; you will need the sides to contain the melted butter. Let your guests open the packages themselves so they can enjoy the impact of the initial blast of steam and the accompanying aroma.

White Chocolate Soup

Serves 6

2½-inch thick slices of brioche
2 tablespoons unsalted butter
1 cup whole milk
1 cup heavy cream
1 pound white chocolate, chopped
¼ vanilla bean
1 teaspoon fleur de sel

1. Remove crusts from slices of brioche and cut into ½-inch cubes. In a sauté pan over medium-high heat, melt butter and add brioche, sautéing until lightly golden on all sides. Remove "croutons" from heat. 2. In a small saucepan, add milk and cream. Slice the vanilla bean lengthwise and scrape the inside of the pod. Add the inside of the pod along with the vanilla bean to the milk and cream and bring mixture to a simmer. 3. Pour the hot milk and cream mixture over the chopped chocolate. Allow chocolate to begin melting for a minute or two, then whisk until the chocolate is thoroughly incorporated and smooth. 4. Strain the soup through a chinois and serve warm in small cups, garnished with fleur de sel and brioche croutons. ✖✖✖

DOWNSIZE ME
You know that friend who always wants to pull over at Taco Bell on road trips? How about the one who needs two hash browns anytime he drives by McDonald's before 11 am? Or the dude who gets into heated arguments over whether Mickey D's or Burger King has better fries (it's the King)? That's me. I'm all those guys.

AND YET I'M STANDING IN LINE at KnowFat! Lifestyle Grille in Downtown Crossing. The menu has all the familiarities of my usual haunts, but there are some subtle differences: the burgers are described with words like "lean" and "lite" (and those are just the l's); sandwiches are grilled, not fried; and the other patrons are insanely fit, instead of morbidly obese. This is a healthy fast food junkie's world, and I'm about to dive in mouth first. BY RICH LEVINE PHOTOGRAPHS BY ALAN GWIZDOWSKI

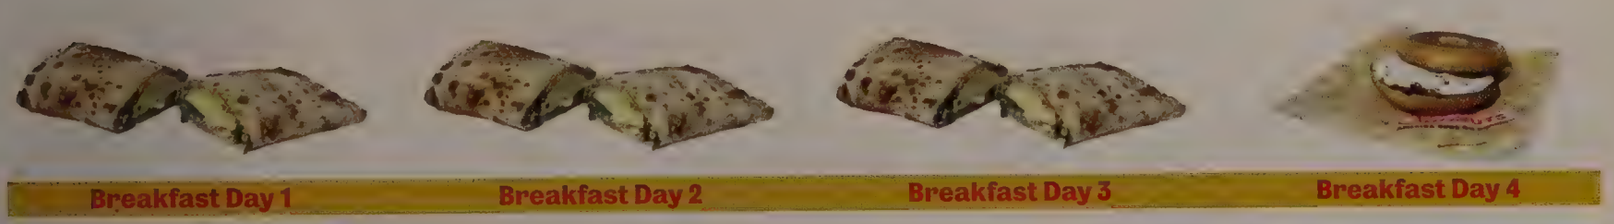
It wasn't until a few years ago that the healthy fast food trend fully arrived in Boston. B.good, a burger joint that promotes its fare as "real food" made fresh everyday with healthy ingredients, opened its first location in the Back Bay in 2004. The following year, KnowFat Grille—promising "healthy and delicious fast food"—opened in Downtown Crossing. These places were essentially saying, "We give you that great fast food taste, without all the bad stuff."

I didn't buy it. Wasn't all the bad stuff what made fast food taste good in the first place? If I was going to eat fast food, I wasn't going to pretend it was nutritious. Plus, I felt an unusual loyalty to the old greasy guard. I didn't care if the new places were a little better for me. Call me when you start running a kickass Monopoly competition.

Obviously, I was in the minority. B.good now has four locations in and around the city (two of which opened last year), and KnowFat has reached the status of nationwide chain, with six Massachusetts outposts and two more on the way. People can't get enough.

I started thinking maybe this food could help me change my eating habits. But one important question remained: Forget the taste, is the stuff actually that much healthier for you? I put the question to an expert.

"The best thing about these places is that they at least give you the option of being healthy, and if you go in there knowing the right things to order it can be a very positive experience," says Dr. Judith Mabel, a local counselor who runs Nutritionboston.com. "Burgers are never an ideal choice, even though the ones at a KnowFat are certainly better than others, but the big deal is the options. Even if people just start choosing the healthier options some of the time, it will have a positive effect on their lives. We see it every day."



With that in mind, I had an idea. Actually, Morgan Spurlock (the star of 2004's Super Size Me) had an idea, but I came up with the idea to steal it. For one month, I'd only eat healthful fast food: a health-conscious, on-the-run breakfast, lunch at B.good and dinner at KnowFat. I'd track my health, and after 30 days I'd have my definitive answer! Then I found out my deadline was in two weeks... and after one week I'd have my definitive answer! Here's what went down:

The diet lasted for eight days (Tuesday to Tuesday), and before I started I met with esteemed second-year Tufts-NEMC resident Dr. Eric Fornari—he's the best doctor of all my freshman-year roommates. Dr. F. would take my vitals—heart rate (HR), blood pressure (BP), respiratory rate (RR) and oxygen saturation (OS) on Days 1, 4 and 8—and I'd also weigh myself.

Tuesday, Day 1

Weight: 192 pounds; HR: 68; BP: 138/72; RR: 14; OS: 99%

I'd compare eating the meals on Day 1 to taking the first shot at the beginning of a long night of drinking. It doesn't have much effect, and you actually kind of like it, but it's only real job is to warm up your body and coat your stomach for the beating it's about to take. Things are great now, but by this time next week, a turkey burger will look about as appetizing as a warm shot of Patrón on Sunday morning.

Wednesday, Day 2

Another day, another feta breakfast wrap. Lunch and dinner are both solid, highlighted by the KnowFat AirFries. They taste way too good to be healthy. My body feels great. My jeans? Not so much, thanks to the silver-dollar-sized dollop of blue cheese that flew out of my buffalo chicken sandwich. So remember that the next time you see me wearing those jeans. It's blue cheese.

Thursday, Day 3

Some people snack a lot over the course of the day and eat smaller meals; others enjoy three feasts and take it easy in between. I've adopted the custom of eating big meals and snacking all day. Coincidentally, it's Day 3 and I'm starving all the time. I guess portion control is a big part of every diet (and it's definitely one of the focuses of the KnowFat plan), so I'm sure it's for the best.

Friday, Day 4

Weight: 191 pounds; HR: 64; BP: 132/80; RR: 16; OS: 99%

We're calling this the project's halfway point, and that means a visit from Dr. F and his bag of medical tricks. Did I mention I love the KnowFat AirFries? I'm eating one as the doctor takes my blood pressure and wonder if I'm the first person to ever simultaneously partake in these two activities. I've actually lost two pounds, and my blood pressure and heart and respiratory rates have all improved slightly. My oxygen saturation stayed the same, but I have no clue what that means, so let's move on.

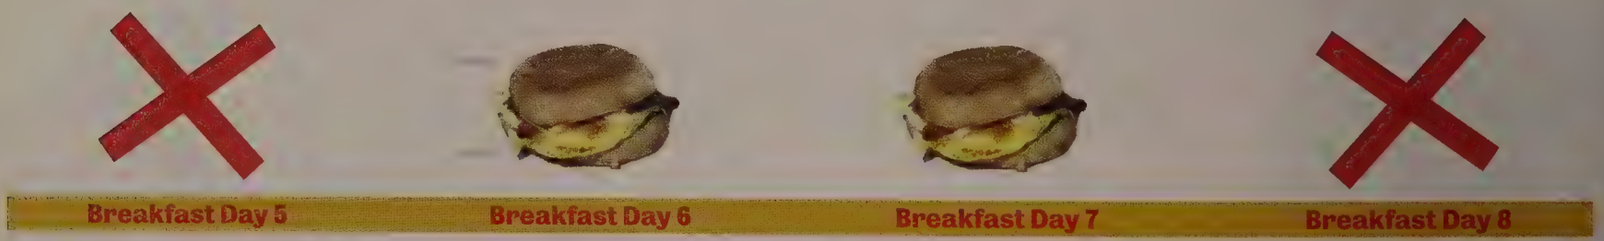
After only one week of healthful fast food, I'm healthier, I feel better and goddamn if I don't look better.

Saturday, Day 5

As you'd imagine, the weekend is the worst time to try and pull off a diet of these proportions. I'm hung over and tired, and all I want to do is sit on the couch, order a sub for lunch and a pizza for dinner. Anyway, I oversleep breakfast and when lunchtime arrives, subzero temperatures scare me away from making the trip to B.good. I settle for a Lean Cuisine, which I know is a bit of a stretch, but if it's called Lean Cuisine and can be ready to eat in less than four minutes, it's healthful fast food. Still feeling good, by the way. A little low on energy, but good overall.

Sunday, Day 6

I'm starting to see the light, but honestly, I really don't mind. The hardest part is just getting off my ass to the restaurants. If someone were willing to deliver the meals to me three times a day, I could go on longer. Maybe I've conquered my fast food issues; looks like it's time to focus on my laziness issues. For the first time all week I have a salad for dinner, which essentially means I eat steak, lettuce and dressing.



Monday, Day 7

I wake up sick. I'm not blaming anyone. Not the diet, not Dr. F, not even the glass of two-month-old milk I drank before going to bed. But I'm sick. I skip work, but decide to keep trucking. I eat my breakfast sandwich and immediately feel worse, so I only have a bowl of chicken soup for the rest of the afternoon. By dinner, I'm ready to get back on the wagon and head to KnowFat for the seventh time in as many days.

Tuesday, Day 8

Weight: 188 pounds; HR: 70; BP: 112/85; RR: 14; OS: 100%

So what can we make of my week in healthful hell? My vitals speak for themselves. I lost four pounds. My heart rate went from 68 to 70; my blood pressure's down from 138/72 to 112/85. My respiratory rate and oxygen saturation stayed about the same. Is this more a result of my horse-like pre-diet eating habits or a product of what a steady helping of this healthful fast food can do for you? We can only go with what we know, and that's this: After only one week of healthful fast food, I'm healthier, I feel better and goddamn if I don't look better. I think we've got to call it a success. Let's celebrate with some AirFries. ***

Back away from the sale-priced skinny jeans and get ready for 2008's hottest trends.

The STYLE of THINGS to COME

Light-wash Jeans

Faded, worn-in denim will replace last year's stiff, dark rinse as the wash of the moment. We also foresee the '70s flare thoroughly ousting the '80s skinny cut as the jean du jour—stick with a wider leg when shopping for your new light-wash pair.

Sporty

Anoraks, sweatshirts, racer-back tanks and other athletic-inspired items will re-emerge on the runways. Sporty pieces add casual, urban style to any outfit and look good layered, so you can wear them while it's still cold and well into spring and summer.

Ethnic-inspired Prints

These bright, graphic prints, reflecting global crafts—from pre-Columbian South America to Southeast Asia to sub-Saharan Africa—will make a big splash as the fashion establishment revisits the '70s and embraces its inner hippie.

Saddle Leather

Fall's bright patent leathers will stay hot, but we also predict a resurgence of traditional, saddle-brown leather bags, belts and sandals. We love how this earthy-looking material contrasts with fancy fabrics like metallic brocade or satin, lending them a cool, casual attitude.

CHAMPAGNE SUPERNOVA

It may just be a vain flip of the calendar, but New Year's Eve always packs a psychic wallop. It's a chance to leave old disappointments behind like an empty highball glass, stained with last season's lipstick, while the future beckons, mysterious but full of promise like an approaching tray of crabcakes. It's no wonder we feel the need to spend this night at cocktail parties. In times of uncertainty or somber reflection, nothing brings you more down to earth than a press of humanity in evening dress, waiting in line for the bar.

Movies Edited by Nick Altschuller and Amanda Knorr

American Gangster ★★★ There's nothing you haven't seen a dozen times before in Ridley Scott's pulpy film that traces the rise and fall of Harlem's vicious heroin kingpin, Frank Lucas. But even an old tune can be catchy if it's played well, and it's hard to think of two actors who are more fun to watch right now than Denzel Washington and Russell Crowe. As the uptight Lucas, Denzel's Wall Street tailoring and Sidney Poitier diction makes him stand out like the lone Republican in a swarm of Superflys. By contrast, Crowe's slovenly, workaholic Jersey cop is a bundle of frayed nerves and ruined relationships, but he's the only man tireless enough to bring Lucas down. Steven Zaillian's screenplay is cobbled together from equal parts Scarface and Heat, but it's a blast to see the silky-smooth Washington bump up against Crowe's boisterous Pacino impersonation. Scott's direction is less ostentatious than usual, and he smartly stays out of their way. (At Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Atonement ★★★ Director Joe Wright, who helmed 2005's rollicking, dynamic take on Pride and Prejudice, reteams with Keira Knightley, this time to tackle Ian McEwan's epic WWII downer. The first hour suggests we might be in for a masterpiece, as cinematographer Seamus McGarvey's camera restlessly prowls through the English country estate where Knightley's poor, little rich girl pines for James McAvoy's hapless gardener. Class resentments simmer; sexual tensions sizzle; and a few tragic misunderstandings hurtle things headlong into disaster. Then along comes that pesky war, and Christopher Hampton's screenplay switches gears into more abstract, literary territory, and these vibrant flesh-and-blood characters recede into symbols. Wright desperately tries to hold our attention with an array of visual trickery, but even a breathtakingly staged, unbroken steadicam shot, winding its way around thousands of extras at the Dunkirk evacuation, can't touch the close-quartered intimacy of those early reels. The final kicker is a purely literary flourish, one that connects in the head but not the heart. (At Kendall Square, West Newton, and in the suburbs.)

Bee Movie ★½ Those sobering statistics about disappearing bees may have something to do with climate change. Or it could be that our fuzzy friends are fleeing in embarrassment from Jerry Seinfeld's relentless promotional blitz for this lame kiddie movie. In case you somehow haven't heard, the stand-up comic lends his voice to Barry B. Benson, a curious insect who leaves the hive and strikes up an icky romance with Renée Zellweger's gurgly-voiced florist. When Barry discovers that humans have enslaved his fellow bees for the mass production of honey, a nonsensical lawsuit ensues, which prompts a slight ecological disaster and self-congratulatory cameos from the likes of Ray Liotta and Oprah. Seinfeld's milquetoast observational humor hasn't aged particularly well, and as typical of DreamWorks animated productions, the character designs are ugly and the backgrounds indistinct. It's hard to imagine what children are going to take away from this muddled affair, besides a sinister message to be mindful of your station in life and do what you're told. (At Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Before the Devil Knows You're Dead ★★★½ Disproving the theory that folks mellow with age, 83-year-old director Sidney Lumet enters his fifth decade of filmmaking with the nastiest, most fatalistic thriller of his career. Philip Seymour Hoffman and Ethan Hawke star as financially strapped brothers who attempt to cover debts by knocking off a suburban jewelry store. It's literally a mom-and-pop operation run by their parents (Albert Finney and Rosemary Harris), which sends this seemingly simple bungled heist perilously close to Greek tragedy. Kelly Masterson's screenplay is a grim puzzle-box that zips back and forth through time to savor the Murphy's Law developments. In lesser hands, this could have been a glib Tarantino clone, but Lumet's austere, unobtrusive style allows his actors plenty of room to run and linger on old familial resentments, which develops an emotional resonance rare for this kind of gimmicky crime flick. As always, Hoffman is brilliant, his closed-off cruelty an excellent foil for Hawke's wounded puppy dog performance. (At Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Beowulf ★★ CGI Performance Capture, the creepiest technique in modern filmmaking, attaches newfangled gizmos to an actor, burns their movements onto a hard drive, and spits out an eerie hybrid of photography and animation. Pioneered by director Robert Zemeckis for The Polar Express, this unsettling procedure produces dead-eyed likenesses of famous actors, who then wobble across the screen weightlessly. This time around, Zemeckis takes on that problematic old poem about something rotten in Denmark circa the sixth century, and thus grants hefty character actor Ray Winstone a buff movie star bod, so he can strip naked constantly and battle the snivel-

Sweeney Todd: The Demon Barber of Fleet Street
Starring Johnny Depp, Helena Bonham Carter, Alan Rickman, Timothy Spall and Sacha Baron Cohen. Screenplay by John Logan, based on the musical by Stephen Sondheim and Hugh Wheeler. Directed by Tim Burton. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

IT SEEMS LIKE we get one every year around this time: the dreaded megabudget adaptation of a Broadway musical. If you're unlucky enough to have watched the big-screen blowups of Chicago, Rent or The Phantom of the Opera, it's tough not to wince at another two hours spent enduring actors untrained for the stage prancing about and awkwardly bursting into song. Not to mention the cannibalism and all those throat-slashings.

Hey, wait a minute...

No, Sweeney Todd: The Demon Barber of Fleet Street is not your kid sister's musical. Drenched in rivers of blood, it's a black-hearted, continued on page 66

at times disgustingly comic meditation on the crushing price of vengeance. First unleashed upon New York audiences back in 1979, Stephen Sondheim's sicko spectacular is commonly hailed as the greatest musical theater production of our time. Especially if you ask the show's legion of devotees, who are happy to expound upon the different recordings and casts or compare Angela Lansbury to Patti LuPone with an almost cultish fervor. Inspired by an old English legend, 'tis the grim tale of wronged barber Benjamin Barker, who sates his thirst for retribution by slitting his customers' throats and tossing their corpses into the basement, where his daffy old landlady grinds up the bodies and bakes them into meat pies. Yum.

There have been rumors of a movie adaptation for decades, but the project appeared permanently stalled. Sondheim is notoriously protective of his material, and there aren't many filmmakers in Hollywood adept at blending song and dance with serial murder. But along came Tim Burton, the macabre mastermind who seemed to have lost his mojo—those splendid fantasies of outsider empathy like Edward Scissorhands and Ed Wood giving way to soggy, unwanted remakes like Charlie and the Chocolate Factory and Planet of the Apes.

is his best picture in years: ghoulish, delightful and cheerfully subversive. After the Spielberg-esque treacle of Big Fish and that bizarre detour into Willy Wonka's daddy issues, there was reason to worry Burton had grown up and become a sappy suburbanite. Even his visual schemes had grown slack and lacked his usual fantastic rigor. But there is a clarity and completeness of vision here, a welcome return to Burton's mischievous Goth sensibility.

Johnny Depp stars as Barker, just escaped after 15 years of false imprisonment and hell-bent for revenge on the crooked judge (Alan Rickman) who stole his wife and child. With ghost-white skin and a wild shock of hair, Depp looks like one of Burton's Nightmare Before Christmas characters, yet his performance is more concentrated and still than what we usually see from this eccentric actor. Rechristening himself Sweeney Todd, Barker has retreated to somewhere very dark inside himself. Depp's movements are economical, his eyes laser-focused. It's only when he picks up a straight razor that the character springs to life.

As addled Mrs. Lovett, the mad lady downstairs, Helena Bonham Carter brings a dizzy, deadpan timing. Doddering, her hair splaying out like a mangy spider plant, she holds an ardent yearning for her murderous tenant,

Depp and Bonham Carter are wonderful, save for one teensy caveat: They can't sing. Sure, they sound better than I do in the shower, but Sondheim's song score—allegedly inspired by the jagged soundtracks of Alfred Hitchcock's regular composer, Bernard Hermann—is one of the trickiest in musical theater. Depp sometimes gets away with keeping his voice low and half-talking his way through the numbers, but Bonham Carter extinguishes the sly humor in the lyrics by garbling her words. Burton's swooping, inventive camerawork and the soul-stirring orchestrations too often soar toward transcendence, only to be dragged down by the pedestrian vocalizing.

Either a testament to Burton's renewed confidence or the gonzo power of the source material, the movie still somehow works in spite of this large and crippling flaw. Scaled down from three to two hours by scenarist John Logan, Sweeney's sad saga charges along with a tragic sense of inevitability. Some of the show's more outré sexual material has been excised, but Burton certainly doesn't skimp on the blood, which squirts in bright, blinding contrast to cinematographer Darius Wolski's ashen palate. Such spare use of color supplies some of the picture's best gags, like the outrageous blue suit worn by Sacha Baron Cohen's rival barber or Mrs. Lovett's riotous vacation fantasy, in which Depp and Bonham Carter stick out like Charles Addams drawings dropped into a Betty and Veronica comic book.

After the last fine mist of arterial spray soaks the camera lens, it's tough not to wonder exactly what kind of audience Sweeney Todd is aiming for. Drama Club kids who read Fangoria? Who knows? Furthermore, who cares? The movie is something singular and exciting, even if it's a shame about the singing. ★★★

ing demon Grendel. Angelina Jolie vamps it up as the monster's mommy in this weirdly sexualized adaptation. Some theaters are showing Beowulf in 3-D, which, if you must, is the way to go. The leaden, humorless screenplay by Neil Gaiman and Roger Avary feels less oppressive when all manner of swords and limbs are flying in your face. (In the suburbs.)

Charlie Wilson's War ★★½ It should have been the movie of the year. Begging for pointed satire, the true-life saga of a Texas congressman (Tom Hanks) covertly arming and training the Afghan mujahideen is a ripe example of American victories coming back to bite us on the backside. But, working from a sharp and extremely funny script by West Wing writer Aaron Sorkin (here making amends for his odious Studio 60 on the Sunset Strip), director Mike Nichols chickens out by softening all the body-blows with broad comedic flourishes and abruptly pulling the plug before the logical ending. Still, Hanks is a joy to watch as the debauched do-gooder, bantering back and forth with Philip Seymour Hoffman's movie-stealing CIA crank. Wildly miscast as a voracious millionaire man-eater, Julia Roberts does a lousy

Susan Sarandon impression. There are enough meaty moments to make the film almost worthwhile, but it's too bad Nichols pulled so many punches. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Dan in Real Life ★★ Pleasant enough and almost instantly forgettable, this well-photographed romantic comedy stars Steve Carell as a down-on-his-luck widower with three cloyingly cute daughters. En route to a family reunion in Rhode Island, Carell falls hard for Juliette Binoche, not realizing she's his brother's new girlfriend. As his brother is played by Dane Cook, one must pause and wonder in what kind of cruel and unfair universe a sophisticated goddess like Juliette Binoche would date a loutish MySpace comedian. In any case, Carell and Binoche make goo-goo eyes and share longing glances throughout the most trite family get-together ever captured on film. John Mahoney and Dianne Wiest are on hand as the grandparents who, as if on cue, deliver knowing chestnuts of wisdom through wrinkly smiles. The movie is so self-consciously warm and cozy it might as well be wearing a big fuzzy sweater. (In the suburbs.)

The Darjeeling Limited ★★★½ Already an icon to skinny-jeaned, suit-coated hipsters everywhere, director Wes Anderson makes a giant leap forward with this lyrical, melancholy tale of three estranged brothers traveling through India by train in an attempt to reconnect and find some sort of spiritual enlightenment. It's probably impossible to keep thoughts of Owen Wilson's well-publicized personal problems from affecting one's perception of his dark and impressive turn as the domineering oldest sibling, while Adrien Brody and Jason Schwartzman (who cowrote the screenplay with Anderson and Roman Coppola) offer some very funny, sort-of-sad turns as similarly stunted man-children. Anderson's obsessive-compulsive set design, obnoxious color-coding and meticulous widescreen compositions can often feel like asphyxiating affectations, but somewhere along the way, Darjeeling blossoms into his messiest and most moving film to date, with flights of whimsy grounded for the first time in very human pain and confusion. The central motif, about letting go of baggage both physical and emotional, is annoyingly literal, but the obtuseness doesn't make it any less deeply felt. (In the suburbs.)

The Diving Bell and the Butterfly ★★½ Formerly a famous irritant on the 1980s New York art scene, painter Julian Schnabel has evolved into a fascinating filmmaker, helming unconventional, if spotty, biographical pieces boasting kicky, exploratory visuals. The Diving Bell and the Butterfly tells the tale of Elle magazine editor Jean-Dominique Bauby, felled by a stroke and unable to move anything but his left eyelid. The condition, described here as "locked-in syndrome," hardly kept Bauby from penning his memoirs. It just took a bit more work than expected. Schnabel shoots huge chunks of the movie from his protagonist's point of view, the screen cutting to black as he communicates by blinking. As Bauby, Mathieu Almeric, the Roman Polanski look-alike who stole so many scenes in Steven Spielberg's Munich, brings a dry wit to the narration and finds sneaky ways around his role's obvious restrictions. Like Schnabel's Basquiat and Before Night Falls, Diving Bell is maddeningly inconsistent but has a lyrical sense of freedom. It's anything but locked-in. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Elizabeth: The Golden Age ★½ It might have boasted the breakout performance that rocketed Aussie firebrand Cate Blanchett to international superstardom, but it's worth remembering that 1998's Elizabeth was also a slightly silly picture, with some sly supporting turns keeping the overwrought melodrama from teetering over into camp. Alas, this soppy, belated sequel can't manage such a balancing act and inspires unintentional guffaws from the get-go. Perhaps realizing that the first picture developed a video afterlife as a favorite of teenage girls, director Shekhar Kapur has instructed Blanchett to play the 52-year-old monarch as if auditioning for High School Musical 3. Those dastardly Spanish Catholics are about to invade, but our Virgin Queen is busy giggling girlishly and being all moony-eyed for Clive Owen's Sir Walter Raleigh. Owen seems to be channeling Fabio as he prances around in a hilarious collection of costumes while over-enunciating cringe-worthy double entendres. Kapur's magisterial overhead shots and swirling 360-degree dolly shots are more headache-inducing than evocative. (In the suburbs.)

Enchanted ★★★ Doe-eyed Amy Adams, the one memorable thing about 2005's somnambulist Southern drama Junebug, delivers a genuine star-making performance in Disney's latest reboot of its fairy princess franchise. Adams plays Giselle, a perky cartoon whisked away to modern-day Manhattan by the spell of a wicked witch (Susan Sarandon, naturally.) The clash of animated sensibilities and banal real life gets a sufficient workout in Bill Kelly's screenplay, as our heroine spins lavish costumes out of curtains and sings with her animal friends, but since this is NYC, they're rats and cockroaches. As Giselle's improbable love interest, Patrick Dempsey seems to assume that his hair will do the acting for him. Not so, though, for James Marsden, hamming up a storm as a blowhard Prince Charming. There are enough nifty ideas swirling around Enchanted; one wishes the filmmakers had been a bit more adventurous. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Fred Claus ★ The mere idea of Vince Vaughn playing Santa Claus' loser brother is enough to make you laugh. Throw in the brilliant casting of Paul Giamatti as Saint Nick, and it's hard not to imagine Fred Claus as a holiday classic waiting to happen. But what should've been a diversion as light as 2003's Elf ends up feeling as laborious as that legendary 1985 Dudley Moore dud, Santa Claus: The Movie. Lavishly overbudgeted with enormous eyesore sets and creepy prosthetic makeup work, director David Dobkin's film ladles out enough plotlines for three separate movies and leaves Vaughn stuck sputtering some disappointingly PG riffs, unsure if he should rescue an orphan sidekick, reunite with his annoying girlfriend (Rachel Weisz) or try to keep Kevin Spacey's officious efficiency expert from closing Santa's workshop. Unable to even follow its own tortured logic, the movie veers from one overblown, saccharine set piece to another over a mirthless two hours. Bah, humbug. (At Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Gone Baby Gone ★★★ Good news: Ben Affleck isn't embarrassing anymore. With his confident, downbeat directorial debut, the artist formerly known as Bennifer redeems himself, exhibiting a fantastic knack for getting the most out of Boston's grimmer locations while supplying a star-making role for his kid brother, Casey. Based on the novel by Dennis Lehane, Gone Baby Gone digs deep into the buried secrets of the

More of a Silly Skirmish Julia Roberts tries to seduce Tom Hanks in Charlie Wilson's War, the latest film from the director of The Graduate.

Dorchester projects after the mysterious disappearance of a 4-year-old girl. As a conscience-stricken private detective, the younger Affleck is a modern-day Phillip Marlowe in a tracksuit as he navigates grungy barrooms and flings four-letter words before arriving at a moral dilemma that's all but impossible to resolve. The picture loses considerable steam in its second hour, with too many expository sequences required to resolve Lehane's knotty plotting. But the extraordinary final shot will provoke discussion and argument long after the closing credits have rolled and announces not just a morally complex vision, but also the arrival of a potentially great filmmaker. Who knew Ben still had it in him? (At Fenway, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Grace Is Gone ★½ In this brazen vanity project that's all the more loathsome for being shrouded in political piety, producer John Cusack stars as a mopey Home Depot manager whose GI wife has been killed in Iraq. Unable to figure out how to break this news to his two daughters, the unhinged father drags the kids on a family trip to an amusement park, and thus spends the next hour-and-a-half sneaking away from the children in order to weep, whimper and deliver soppy soliloquies into the camera, essentially pleading for awards consideration. Cusack is such a snarky, disingenuous performer, he's impossible to buy as a conservative, suburban dad, and the portrayal reeks of condescension. Writer-director James Strouse doesn't bother to develop or deepen the scenario; it's the same scene over and over again. There is, however, a plaintive piano score composed by Clint Eastwood, and occasionally the filmmakers have the good sense to turn down the dialogue track and let Eastwood's lovely music drown out the one-note characters. (At Kendall Square.)

Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix ★★★½ The Harry Potter films thus far have felt like a collection of tie-in products dutifully recreating everybody's favorite scenes as if genuflecting before the Stations of the Cross. But now, four sequels into this saga, it finally feels like we're watching an honest-to-god movie.

Coppola's Crummy Comeback

Lightning Crashes Francis Ford Coppola gives directing another go in Youth Without Youth, which winds up portraying exactly how much he's aged.

Forced to slash JK Rowling's unwieldy 870-page novel to a trim two hours and change, director David Yates and screenwriter Michael Goldenberg have at last reconceived the Potter-verse in purely cinematic terms. They scrapped all that Quidditch nonsense and zero in on Harry's adolescent struggle to wrap his still-forming mind around the fallibility of authority figures, the finality of death and the stinking unfairness of how the world really works. It's a surprisingly dark and violent coming-of-age tale, and Yates finds some nifty visual parallels for the character's inner journey. Young Daniel Radcliffe is growing into the role quite nicely, and the most overqualified supporting cast in history again excels, with extra kudos going to Gary Oldman, Alan Rickman and Imelda Staunton's fascist schoolmarm. (In the suburbs.)

I'm Not There ★★★★ Director Todd Haynes' astounding, practically cubist portrait of Bob Dylan explodes decades worth of stale genre tropes with the kind of playful punk sneer you'd expect from the protagonist himself. For starters, Haynes casts half a dozen different Dylans, none of whom are even named Bob, and spills their separate sagas in radically contrasting cinematic styles. Cutting in and out of each tale on a lark, Haynes overlaps emotions in a giddy rush of sensory overload. The approach sounds insane, but actually makes sense when you consider that Dylan has spent the past 40-odd years confounding expectations, shedding personas and stubbornly, often angrily, refusing to be pigeonholed. Haynes' multiple-choice casting coup might be the only way any filmmaker could take on all of Dylan's back pages. The best of the bunch is Cate Blanchett. Sending up the snarling, speed-freak of the early electric era, the actress not only summons not all the right twitches, cigarette flourishes and nasally put-downs; she also nails the attitude. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Into the Wild ★★★½ In 1990, Christopher McCandless (Emile Hirsch) donated his life savings to Oxfam, burned his Social Security card and disappeared down the highway into self-imposed obscurity. Rechristening himself "Alexander Supertramp," McCandless yearned to live the kind of pure existence he'd only read about in books by Henry David Thoreau and Jack London. Two years later he starved to death inside an abandoned bus in Alaska, barely 20 miles from the highway. Plenty of people consider McCandless a hero. Countless folk songs have been written about his journey, and that bus has become a popular tourist attraction. Just as many people, especially in Alaska, will tell you he was an idiot. The beauty of this film, written and directed by Sean Penn, is that it's both dreamy and lucid and filled with a deep respect for McCandless' ideals, but it never lets him off the hook for the spitefulness and naiveté inherent in his foolish, transcendent quest. It feels like a breakthrough for Penn as it throbs with color, possibilities and hope. (In the suburbs.)

Lars and the Real Girl ★★½ Genuine sweetness wrestles with whimsy-overload in director Craig Gillespie's gentle tale of a lonely, emotionally stunted young man (Ryan Gosling, laying it on a little thick) who orders a sex doll over the Internet and deludes himself into thinking she's real. Yes, this sounds incredibly icky, but Six Feet Under scribe Nancy Oliver's screenplay is surprisingly chaste, choosing to focus mainly on the affecting little ways this small snowy community tries to help their troubled neighbor by playing along with his fantasy. The best work comes from up-and-coming actor Paul Schneider, who recently stole scenes left and right in The Assassination of Jesse James, here playing Gosling's conflicted older brother with a stillness and warmth that trumps his costar's overly mannered turn. Gillespie is a bit too in love with the wintry atmospherics and lets the pace slacken until the audience ends up two or three scenes ahead of the movie. Some nice moments, though. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Margot at the Wedding ★★★ Nicole Kidman stars as the worst mother since Medea, or at least since Livia Soprano, a neurotic, passive-aggressive bundle of nerves who begins the movie by dragging her androgynous, deeply confused adolescent son (Zane Pais) along for an ill-advised reunion with her estranged sister (Jennifer Jason Leigh). For one cringe-inducing scene after another, we're waiting for Margot's self-righteous bubble to finally burst, and yet she somehow manages to say exactly the wrong thing and make a bad situation infinitely worse. Gratingly unpleasant yet often hilarious, writer-director Noah Baumbach's follow up to his 2005 I-hate-my-dad hit The Squid and the Whale again mines the grim comedy of embarrassment, as it cuts in and out of scenes at unexpected moments with a jittery, hand-held camera that's always zoomed in a little too close for comfort. In other words, the movie would probably be unwatchable if it weren't so damn funny. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Michael Clayton ★★★ ½ Another whip-smart, politically savvy flick from star/executive producer George Clooney, who cements his status as a throwback to the age of heavyweight leading men with enough gravitas to handle flawed, complicated leading roles. Clooney's title character, a burnt-out fixer for a big-money Manhattan law firm, finds himself growing a conscience after witnessing the shabby treatment of his esteemed colleague (the great Tom Wilkinson) when the latter threatens to blow a billion-dollar lawsuit over a carcinogenic weed-killer. Shot primarily in metallic shades of gray by cinematographer Robert Elswit, Bourne-trilogy screenwriter Tony Gilroy's impressively lean directorial debut has little patience for soft-hearted pieties or conventional modern uplift. The kind of stark, paranoid star vehicle that probably would have been a summer blockbuster back in the early '70s, Michael Clayton oozes class and adult sophistication. Clooney carries the picture on his weary shoulders, subtle glimmers of long-buried idealism slowly dawning behind his downcast eyes. The picture's stirring climax isn't physical but instead a verbal boxing match that's more exciting than most shoot-outs. (In the suburbs.)

The Mist ★½ Professional Stephen King–adapter Frank Darabont is every author's dream—he never reads a page he feels like cutting. After his overpraised and overlong cinematic transcriptions of The Shawshank Redemption and The Green Mile, Darabont set his sights smaller with a slender King novella, one that the filmmaker somehow still managed to drag out for over two hours. Thomas Jane leads a TV-level cast trapped in a supermarket as a supernatural mist obscures the shenanigans of various silly-looking monsters outside. Clumsily groping at 9/11 parallels, the filmmaker apparently never figured out that the cool thing about subversive subtext in '50s monster movies isn't the actual text. Here everybody stands around explaining the allegorical importance of what we're watching. Then comes Darabont's new and improved ending, a depressing and nihilistic finale that prompted King himself to issue a press release saying "anyone who gives it away should be hung from the neck until dead." Funny, I could say the same about whoever came up with such a foul twist. (In the suburbs.)

Mr. Magorium's Wonder Emporium ★ Delivering the kind of confident, extravagantly awful performance that perhaps only a genius would even dare, Dustin Hoffman shrieks and sputters his way through this horrific, bargain-basement Willy Wonka rip-off, which is also the directorial debut from hotshot screenwriter Zack Helm. As a 234-year-old toy maker who appears to have suffered a debilitating stroke, Hoffman putters around a cluttered junk shop, sharing the screen with bad special effects and imparting fortune-cookie wisdom regarding magic and wonder. As his faithful assistant suffering a quarter-life crisis, Natalie Portman vapidly hangs her mouth open while the talky and misguided scenario veers into some bizarre meditation on the inevitability of death. As with Helm's script for Stranger Than Fiction, Magorium follows no internal logic and confounds the viewer at every maudlin turn. Boasting some of the ugliest production design you'll see all year, this eyesore of a movie looks garish, tacky and cheap. (In the suburbs.)

No Country for Old Men ★★★★ Adapted from the 2005 novel by Cormac McCarthy, Joel and Ethan Coen's No Country for Old Men is an enthralling, devastating movie experience. Stripped to the bone, it's a model of ruthless narrative efficiency that blossoms into something much larger than the sum of its precision-tooled parts. What at first seems like the simple saga of two tough hombres and a bag of money eventually attains

a mythic, almost Biblical grandeur. For days afterwards, it haunts your dreams—the bad ones. The Coens have at last gone back to their roots, infusing No Country with the clockwork meticulousness and parched landscapes of their killer 1984 debut, Blood Simple. The movie is almost unbearably suspenseful and boasts the filmmakers' trademark strain of sicko gallows humor. But there's also something new here: a palpable sense of sorrow and genuine emotional resonance. For the first time in their brilliant career, it finally feels like the merry pranksters are out to do more than crack themselves up. (At Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Youth Without Youth ★ Presumably distracted by his successful wine business, the legendary Francis Ford Coppola hasn't set foot behind a camera in 10 years. His bonkers, independently financed comeback attempt suggests he probably should have stayed in the vineyards. Incoherently adapted by Coppola himself from a novella by Mircea Eliade, this crazy-pants rumination on the passage of time stars Tim Roth as a 70-year-old suicidal academic who gets struck by lightning and finds himself young again. It gets weirder, as he soon reconnects with the long-deceased love of his life (fetching newcomer Alexandra Maria Lara) who's likewise struck by lightning and begins channeling a seventh-century sage while speaking Sanskrit in her sleep. Or something like that. The melancholy, coma-inducing pomposity isn't even punctured when Roth develops superpowers or when Matt Damon wanders in for a cameo, clearly as confused as the audience. There's some beautiful digital photography by Mihai Malaimare Jr., but to quote a previous Coppola picture: "The Don is slipping." (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

UNWRAPPED MELODIES

Our critic's holiday picks for the year's worthiest CDs and concert DVDs

Feist / The Reminder. Canadian maverick Leslie Feist floats her aching voice over stark melodies with casual confidence that bridges catchy-as-hell pop ("1234" even made an iPod ad) and folky ballads that pull in unexpected directions.

Radiohead / In Rainbows. Not an actual CD release until Jan. 1, yet already a landmark as a pay-what-you-want download. Never have these experimental rockers sounded so relaxed and on-point, yet still ethereal and abstract. This is Radiohead distilled to its essence.

Robert Plant/Alison Krauss / Raising Sand. It would be treat enough to hear the Led Zeppelin frontman or the bluegrass songbird in the hands of producer T-Bone Burnett. Together they inhabit Burnett's atmospheric blanket of country, pop and blues, forging a surprisingly subtle and sublime blend.

Arcade Fire / Neon Bible. Montreal's ambitious indie rockers up the ante with gothic grandeur, nodding to both New Wave and Springsteen as they get anthemic with strings and pipe organ.

Amy Winehouse / Back to Black. She told us she was trouble and wouldn't go to rehab. Until she cleans up her act (here's hoping), at least we can soak in her sly, Motown-worthy soul.

Bettye LaVette / The Scene of the Crime. Sounding like Tina Turner's soul-blues cousin with her raspy vocal edge, this feisty survivor gets a rock-steady hand from the Drive-By Truckers in nailing her return to Muscle Shoals' studio.

Josh Ritter / The Historical Conquests of Josh Ritter. An ex-Bostonian folkie continues to cross into indie-rock territory by cloaking his songs in broader textural moods.

Patty Griffin / Children Running Through. Other acts cover her songs, but no one sings them quite like Griffin, who buffs her gospel, folk and roots rock to near-perfection.

Kings of Leon / Because of the Times. Southern preacher sons shake up their heartbreak with raw echoes of alt-rock.

the Led Zeppelin frontman or the bluegrass songbird in the hands of producer T-Bone Burnett. Together they forge a subtle and sublime blend.

Concert DVDs:

The Flaming Lips / UFOs at the Zoo. Sensory mania fuels the Lips' 2006 homecoming at the Oklahoma City Zoo. There are quick camera cuts between wild fans and quiet animals, the descent of a mothership light rig and Wayne Coyne's giant bubble walk. And that's just the first 10 minutes.

Rufus Wainwright / Rufus! Rufus! Rufus! Does Judy! Judy! Judy! One gay icon fetes another. Wainwright throws himself into the sumptuous songbook of Judy Garland's 1961 Carnegie Hall concert. He recorded his 2006 New York recreation for CD, but this comes from a London encore with orchestra. It's more tasteful than theatrical (though sister Martha lends a sizzling cameo) and beautifully filmed.

Sigur Rós / Heima. Iceland's majestic landscapes complement the band's ghostly sonics in a unique homeland tour of free concerts. Settings include village fields, an empty herring oil tank and the country's largest-ever show in Reykjavik.

Nine Inch Nails / Live: Beside You in Time. A sober Trent Reznor rages with his animated industrial-strength crew, bolstered by mind-blowing lighting and innovative visuals (at their best when the band gets sandwiched between screens).

Weather Report / Live at Montreux 1976. A crisp snapshot of the jazz-fusion pioneers led by Joe Zawinul (who died this year) and Wayne Shorter. It includes newly hired bass wiz Jaco Pastorius, though the drummers get more focus.

Brecht to Basics

Dolls' House From the "Shores of California" and back to hometown Boston, the Dresden Dolls perform at the Orpheum Theatre on Dec. 29. The eccentric duo will rock the house with piano-percussion inventions and intense lyrics, described by frontwoman Amanda Palmer as "Brechtian punk cabaret." Yes, Virginia... this is the one you've been waiting for all year.

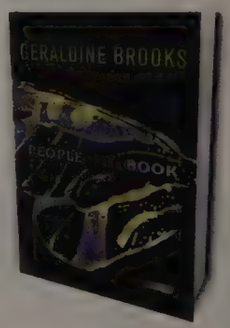
Books & Poetry

Edited by Nick Altschuller



People of the Next Bestselling Book

History and Mystery

Following the mold of The Da Vinci Code and other works of historical fiction, People of the Book follows a young academic who tries to recover the famed Sarajevo Haggadah. Meet the author, Pulitzer Prize–winner Geraldine Brooks, at the Coolidge Corner Theatre on Jan. 8, and grab a copy before it becomes the commuter novel du jour and Ron Howard decides to make a bad adaptation.

Rockie Horoscope { ROCKIE GARDINER }

SHOW GOAT

[DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20]
You don't have to wait until Christmas for the best gift of them all. Once benevolent Jupiter enters your sign Dec. 18, your year of good fortune, good health and happiness begins. Take a minute around the solstice to envision what you want to occur during the next 12 months and the ways in which your life may be enriched. Not only will you have expansive Jupiter offering opportunities for financial and intellectual growth, but Pluto's 16-year transit of Capricorn and your personal transformation start as January ends.

AQUARIUS [January 21–February 18]
Sociable Aquarians might finally do enough party hopping this holiday season to last, if not a lifetime, then until Aquarius begins next month. With four planets in your house of acquaintances, colleagues and the rest of humanity emphasizing your concern for a bunch of worthy causes, you may welcome three of those planets shifting from optimistic Sag to pragmatic Capricorn. Despite these dramatic changes, will you be more interested in what can actually be achieved than the glamorous folks you're hobnobbing with?

PISCES [February 19–March 19]
Fish might not notice that one by one the pressures you've been under are fading from view. The first and most important would follow expansive, expensive Jupiter leaving your Sagittarius career midheaven for the more practical realm ruled by Capricorn. Once the incentive to do more, be more and accumulate more has been lifted, you can relax. Then, as winter arrives and romantic Venus eyes your Neptune ruler, you could become aware that an attractive, possibly exotic persona is interested in knowing you a lot better.

ARIES [March 20–April 19]
One of the opportunities for individual growth during 2008 might manifest as early as this week. If there's a chance to travel to far-away places, even to another coast, by all means follow through on the offer, no matter what it takes. "Great good fortune," as the I Ching says, comes to Rams eager to gain more knowledge about the planet and, while you're at it, figure out how to prosper in a foreign land. With expansive Jupiter in your Capricorn career house for the next 12 months, your reputation could grow as big as your bankroll.

TAURUS [April 20–May 20]
To think that a practical albeit sensual Taurus could focus almost all your attention on enjoying the fruits of other people's money this holiday season is truly mind-boggling. However, such is the case. Be it an investment, an insurance award or an inheritance, graciously accepting these "gifts" will carry you well into the new year. But if acquisitions aren't your cup of tea, the romantics among you might be equally thrilled with the action your affectionate Venus ruler attracts while passing through sexy Scorpio.

GEMINI [May 21–June 20]
There are quite a few astrological high points scheduled for the rest of the year, but the one that can have the greatest impact on you personally is the union of your Mercury ruler and the sun in your Sagittarius marriage house Dec. 17. Because Mercury is so NOT retrograde, the message you hear, the image you envision will more likely be about your future than your past. Dec. 19 can also be significant: Mercury conjuncts powerful, clandestine Pluto before crossing into Capricorn, the sign of the ruling class, the next day.

CANCER [June 21–July 22]
With so many star-driven events on tap, this holiday season could be a crucial one in world history, and a noteworthy one in your diary. Once generous Jupiter enters your Capricorn complement Dec. 18, start looking for a "sugar daddy" or "sweet momma" who may provide the kind of opportunities you haven't been offered since 1995. Can't remember that far back? Ask a sober sibling or neighbor. Since prudent Saturn has settled in their zone, they're the folks you can rely on for the next two years.

LEO [July 23–August 22]
The hot times won't stop when jolly Jupiter leaves fiery Sagittarius for highly structured, goal-oriented Capricorn, but your aspirations might burn a little brighter. This is especially true after your sun ruler conjuncts regenerative Pluto, crosses the Galactic Core and enters the sign of the Executive at the solstice. With so much astrological activity in your house of work, diet and health, it should be relatively easy to stick with a few New Year's resolutions, e.g., to get out of debt and whip your body into shape.

VIRGO [August 23–September 22]
For the past year expansive Jupiter has been busy stretching your concept of roots; next year you'll be encouraged to enjoy the rewards of the action you took. The gigantic gassy guy enters your Capricorn house of recreation and romance Dec. 18, followed by your Mercury ruler two days later and, on the solstice, the sun. In mid-January powerful Pluto will follow suit. This is a major shift in your chart, and while not every Virgin will respond to these stimuli at the same time, those born in August should look for the mistletoe ASAP.

LIBRA [September 23–October 22]
Becoming friendly with the neighbors, celebrating each other's good fortune and looking after one another's property can be attributed to Jupiter's transit this year through your Sagittarius house of neighbors, fellow students, even e-mail correspondents. Although the good feelings you've shared won't necessarily end after Jupiter moves into ambitious Capricorn, the benefits it bestows are more likely to flow both to and from close family members. Maybe you'll start a business from home or undertake a remodeling project.

SCORPIO [October 23–November 21]
Unless you were born on the Libra cusp, Scorpio can still enjoy the power, the glory and the enormous financial potential that stems from your Pluto coruler's position in late Sagittarius/early Capricorn during 2008. While generous Jupiter leaves your Sag money house Dec. 18, not to return for another 12 years, slow-moving Pluto isn't going far. Depending on whether Jupiter's yearlong visit cost you a small fortune or provided opportunities to earn one, this news could be either thrilling or chilling.

SAGITTARIUS [November 22–December 21] While some Archers may mourn the loss of your Jupiter ruler as it progresses on to Capricorn, others will be cheered by the thought that the Great Benefactor will spend 2008 in their house of assets and acquisitions. How much and how soon? It pretty much depends on what you set up for yourself in 2007, what chances you took and how rosy was the lens you were looking through. Chances are those of you with Sag rising were more perspicuous than those of us with our natal suns in this sunny sign and a different Ascendant.

KELLY
AUTOMOTIVE GROUP

The Kelly Automotive Group Offers Answers to the Frequently Pondered Questions of Car Buyers.

In a world when the internet offers an array of endless automotive data, there are still fundamental questions consumers struggle with every day. So, Brian Kelly, President of the Kelly Automotive Group has produced a series of videos that answer some of these questions, in a detailed, yet easy to understand manner, without a business agenda.

There are four such videos...

- Lease Or Buy
- Best Way To Finance
- How To Read A Car Ad
- How To Choose A Dealer

"I am asked these questions everywhere I go," Brian Kelly explains. "It's time the public has a professional and inside explanation. At first glance, it would be logical to assume these videos are elongated Kelly commercials, but refreshingly they are not."

All four videos are there for your immediate viewing, right now, at kellyauto.com

The IMPROPER On the Town!

RESTAURANTS

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142 www.irishconnection.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and the elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features creative, comfort cuisine. On weekends, Chef Michael McEwen turns out "late-night" cuisine until 1:30 a.m., featuring midnight snacks of fritto misto, baked fondue and pancakes and eggs from the brunch menu. Brownstone is open seven days a week from 11 a.m. – 2 a.m., serving brunch on Saturday and Sunday from 10 a.m. – 3 p.m.

COOGAN'S [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415. www.irishconnection.com] Established in 1996, Coogan's is a cozy pub located in the heart of Boston's financial district. It's the perfect place to enjoy hearty pasta dishes, fresh seafood or the aged Black Angus cuts of beef. Wash it down with your pick of one of our 20 draught beers. Enjoy the view of the street side from the bay windows, the warmth of the fireplace or cozy up in a booth with friends. After dark, Coogan's heats up, with DJ's playing top 40.

FUGAKYU [1280 Beacon Street (Coolidge Corner), Brookline, MA 02446, 617-734-1268. www.fugakyu] net. Authentic Japanese cuisine in an elegant and serene setting. Open Daily for lunch and dinner, Fugakyu's menu consists of traditional and nouveau Japanese cuisine including sushi, sashimi, tempura and an extensive sake list. Fugakyu is the largest Japanese restaurant in New England. It's two floors include a sushi bar, cocktail bar, common dining areas, bamboo-enclosed booths, screened Tatami rooms and several private function rooms. Reservations for parties of all sizes are accepted. Takeout and delivery available.

MATCH [94 Massachusetts Ave., at Newbury Street, Boston, 617-247-9922] This modern restaurant/lounge maintains an unpretentious yet hip vibe. A sleek fire display and glass wine room are just two of its many features. Match's signature mini burgers and martinis are guaranteed to please the most discriminating palate. Match music has a distinct early evening lounge feel with the beat and volume picking up as the night progresses. Open daily 5pm-1am. AE, DC, MC,V.

M.J. O'CONNOR'S [27 Columbus Ave., at Park Plaza, Boston 617-482-2255 www.mjocconors. com] Eclectic Irish Food and spirits, a warm friendly staff and beautifully handcrafted woodwork and murals make this authentic upscale Irish pub one of Boston's best. Starting with only the finest ingredients, each dish is slow cooked according to recipes that have been used for generations. If you're looking for a respite from the hustle and bustle of the city, M.J. O'Connor's is a comfortable and welcoming environment to enjoy a delicious meal, have a pint and some great conversation. Open 11am - 2am 7 days a week.

Enjoy great sushi at Fugakyu

NED DEVINE'S FANEUIL HALL MARKETPLACE [Quincy Market Building, Boston 617-248-8800 www.neddevineboston. com] Located in historic Faneuil Hall Marketplace's Quincy Market Building, Ned Devine's is an upscale Irish Pub concept which features hearty Irish specialties and contemporary American cuisine. Whether it's an afternoon business meeting, dinner with family or after work social gathering, Ned's is a warm meeting spot to enjoy conversation and a wonderful meal. Hand painted murals, imported Irish woodwork, original brickwork and ambient lighting create a comfortable atmosphere in the heart of downtown Boston. Open 11am - 2am, 7 days a week.

ROGGIE'S NEW AGE BREW & GRILLE [356 Chestnut Hill Avenue, Cleveland Circle, Brighton, 617-566-1880. www.roggies.com] This all time favorite restaurant and bar has over 52 beers on tap. THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286. www.irishconnec tion.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall-Quincy market area of Boston and is known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef and of course, Mother Sweeney's corned beef, a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself. For thirty years, The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftains, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

Last Scene Here { JONATHAN SOROFF }

AND JUSTICE FOR ALL

Wendell Chestnut and Zane Bell at the JRI dinner

Oh, That 18th Amendment...

Its founders would've undoubtedly rolled over in their graves, but it was worth offending Brahmin sensibilities when the Associate Members of the Boston Athenaeum turned one of the country's oldest independent libraries into a speakeasy for a Roaring Twenties Party.

Held in conjunction with an exhibition about Jazz Age icons Gerald and Sara Murphy (friends of Cole Porter and the inspiration for F. Scott Fitzgerald's Tender Is the Night), the evening had a genuinely illicit feel. Entering guests were asked for a password, handed a playing card and ushered up several flights of stairs through the stacks, emerging at last into a dimly lit den of iniquity that happened to be a reading room lined with books and marble busts. A jazz band played while celebrity bartenders Misty Kalkofen and John Gertsen whipped up old-school cocktails using gin that was, thankfully, not made in a bathtub.

Haven Tyler and Laura Sauter at the Athenaeum

Among the bootleggers, floozies, flappers and Gatsby wannabes were the Marcel-waved Angela Smalley, BFFs and colleagues in crime Haven Tyler and Laura Sauter, the improbably tall Michael Dobies with New York interior designer Andrew Lee, and one woman who said, "My coat is vintage '20s," to which a friend responded, "Wow, the whiff of mothballs never would've given it away."

However, the evening's cattiest comment came from a woman who, when asked what two of the other guests did for a living, said, "They work together in an investment company. The fact that they're their only clients shouldn't mean a thing."

So a Rabbi Walks Into a Hotel Ballroom...

You can finish that joke however you like, but the way the Jewish Community Centers did it at their annual Lights and Spice Ball at the Westin was to host a Hanukkah hoedown of truly Maccabean proportions.

On hand were the evening's honorees, Judy and Jason Chudnofsky and Marie and Stewart Cohen, event chairs Wendy Goldstein Pierce, Chip Pierce, Lori Barnet and Jeffrey Savit, art dealer Abi Ross Goodman and her glamorous sister Alison Ross, the tall, dark and handsome Ken Frieze with the stunning Tamar Salter, best-selling author Ben Mezrich with his smoking hot wife, Tonya Chen Mezrich, fabulous fashion plate Liza Cohen, yummy mummy Kasey Kaufman and her other half, Michael Horwitz, brunette bombshell Ann Trautenberg, departing Red Sox brass Charles Steinberg, and at least one rabbi, Mark Sokol, not to mention the person who muttered during the fundraising portion of the evening, "$5,000 to send a kid to camp? Why not just send 'em to Europe for the summer?"

Maybe, but I Think She Was Wearing Chick Filets...

Overheard at the holiday party cohosted at Shreve, Crump and Low by power chicks Geri Denterlein and Jan Saragoni—which attracted the likes of two-time World Series winner Larry Lucchino, presidential descendant Jim Roosevelt, newspaper royalty and Boston Brahmin Ben Bradlee Jr. (Saragoni's husband), Shreve's savior David Walker, eminence grise John Henning and others of high-gloss ilk.

A woman who was complimented on her jewelry responded by saying, "Oh, the diamonds are fake... but my tits are real."

Tonya Chen Mezrich and Ben Mezrich at the Lights and Spice Ball

Perhaps Brevity Is the Soul of Marriage...

What does it take to get an A-list crowd out to Brookline for an event as drily named as the Justice Awards Dinner?

Ask the folks at the Justice Resource Initiative, which provides care to marginalized teenagers at facilities like the Sidney Borum Health Center. They held a party at the Veronique Ballroom that attracted the likes of banking behemoth Wendell Chestnut and his real estate tycoon other half, Zane Bell, low-key do-gooder Andrew Fullem, corn-fed cutie David Brown of Channel 5, hotel scion Tedd Saunders and two of the evening's honorees, Jim Apteker and Ediss Gandelman (the third, Barney Frank, was a no-show because that sandbox called Congress was still in session).

Drinks and a silent auction were followed by dinner and blessedly brief remarks, including one speaker who started by saying, "As Elizabeth Taylor told each of her husbands: 'Don't worry. I won't keep you long.'" ***
